DEMOCRATIC AMENDMENTS ARE PROMPTLY VOTED DOWN BY REPUBLICAN MAJORITY

Mr. Sulzer of New York Charges That the Anti-Trust Bill Was Drawn by Lawyers Hired by Trusts.

ALL JOIN HANDS AT ROLL CALL

FEATURES OF THE LITTLEFIELD BILL

New corporations doing an interstate business must file under oath with the interstate commerce commission a full statement of their capital stock, shareholders, dividends, wages, etc. The interstate commerce commission may require such a statement under oath at their discretion from corporations already organized. These statements shall be made public when filed.

Power is given the interstate commerce commission to investigate the management of corporations doing interstate business.

Rebates and all forms of discrimination on the part of giver or receiver are made a crime, punishable by fine or imprisonment.

The creation and maintenance of monopolies destructive to competition are prohibited.

Interstate transportation is denied to monopoly-made goods.

Circuit courts of the United States are invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of the act.

By the unanimous adoption in the house today of the Littlefield anti-trust bill both branches of congress now stand committed to one of the great features of anti-trust legislation, the prohibition of rebates and discriminations. If the senate adopts the conference report on the department of commerce and labor bill both branches will be recorded in favor of another great feature of anti-trust legislation, publicity.

There is a difference in degree of publicity and prohibition between the two houses, but with the general principle at last adopted, it is believed by the friends of anti-trust legislation that something effective and in line with the president's desires will be the final result.

The Littlefield bill covers all features of anti-trust legislation discussed in the last two years, and is considered by the friends of such legislation as more effective than anything that has yet passed either branch of congress. It remains now for the senate to accept the Littlefield bill or the house to accept the Elkins bill.

The last day of debate in the house was devoted to five-minute speeches and arguments on the various amendments offered by the Democrats. The minority members fought the bill for three hours and bent every energy toward amending it for the purpose of adding "teeth" to it. Failing in this, they all turned about and voted for the final passage of the bill.

Party Lines Broken Once.

On only one vote were the political ranks broken. It was on an amendment offered by Mr. Thomas (Rep., Iowa) to make the filing of returns incumbent upon all corporations mandatory. On that amendment seven Republicans voted with the Democrats. The bill as passed requires corporations "hereafter organized" to file returns, covering its articles of incorporation, financial composition, condition, etc., with the interstate commerce commission, on penalty of being restrained from engaging in interstate commerce, prescribes penalties for false returns, etc. The commission is given authority in its discretion to call for similar returns from existing corporations doing an interstate business. The commission is given power to compel the answer to questions and a fine of not to exceed $5,000 is imposed for failure to obey the commission in this respect.

Rebate by carriers is made punishable with a fine of not less than $1,000 and corporations violating the provisions of this section are forbidden the use of the instrumentalities of interstate commerce. Carriers are prohibited from knowingly transporting articles produced, manufactured or sold in violation of the Sherman act.

Not Excused from Testifying.

In cases of prosecutions no person is to be excused from testifying on the ground that such testimony would tend to incriminate him, but for such testimony the witness is not to be prosecuted. The circuit courts are given jurisdiction in cases of violation and it is made the duty of the district attorneys to institute proceedings to prevent violations and individuals damaged by violations are given authority to sue.

In the absence of Speaker Henderson, who is confined to his hotel with a sore throat, Mr. Lacey of Iowa presided. Some routine business preceded the resumption of the consideration of the anti-trust bill. The senate amendments to the army appropriation bill were non-concurred in and the bill was sent to conference. Messrs. Hull (Iowa), Capron (R. I.) and Hay (Va.) were appointed conferees.

General debate on the anti-trust bill having closed yesterday the bill was read for amendment under the five-minute rule. Mr. Littlefield, in charge of the bill, offered an amendment to section one which was adopted, providing that suits for failure to make returns under the bill could be brought wherever the defaulting corporation "has a place of business."

Mr. DeArmond (Mo.) offered the minority amendment to this section providing that all corporations with a capital of $100,000 or more doing an interstate business, "now or hereafter" organized should make annual returns. The bill of the committee, he explained, only required returns from corporations "hereafter organized" except where called for by the interstate commerce commission. He thought all corporations should be placed on an equal footing in this regard.

Mr. Overstreet (Rep., Indiana), speaking for the majority, said that it desired to "steer a middle course." The bill would compel future corporations to file returns, but lodged with the commission the discretion to call for reports from existing corporations.

The amendment was voted down, 70 to 96. Mr. Thomas (Rep., Iowa) offered another amendment, in substance like that offered by Mr. De Armond, except that there was no limitation upon the capital stock of corporations required to file returns, and it also was voted down, 76 to 91.

Mr. Sulzer (Dem., N. Y.) charged that

STANDARD TRIES TO STOP CONGRESS

Rockefeller Said to Have Issued Orders by Telegraph.

EFFORT IS REBUKED

[By Associated Press to The Gazette.]

Washington, Feb. 7.—Unless anti-trust legislation satisfactory to the administration is enacted at the present session, President Roosevelt on the fifth of March will call an extraordinary session of the Fifty-eighth congress. The determination of the president was reached after consideration of the strenuous efforts that are being made to defeat any anti-trust legislation.

These efforts culminated during the past 36 hours in direct appeals from the Standard Oil Company through its president, John D. Rockefeller, to members of the senate not to enact any anti-trust legislation at this time. No less than six United States senators have received telegrams signed "John D. Rockefeller," urging that no anti-trust legislation be enacted. It has not been possible to obtain a copy of these dispatches, which, is can be said, are practically identical. Substantially they read as follows:

"We are opposed to any anti-trust legislation. Our counsel, Mr. ———, will see you. It must be stopped."

Counsel Coldly Received.

Yesterday one of the counsel of the Standard Oil Company arrived in Washington and called immediately upon members of the senate, as indicated in the telegrams. He did not remain long. Scarcely had he made known his business than he was informed curtly that his presence here was undesirable, and he left, with an intimation that he would better return to New York.

During the afternoon information concerning the receipt of the messages became the subject of some quiet cloakroom discussion at the senate. The news also reached the house, some of the prominent representatives learning the gist of the dispatches. Then it became known that this was not the first time the Standard Oil Company, through its attorneys, had endeavored to influence legislation in congress at this session.

The attorneys of the company, it was stated, had opposed vigorously the enactment of the measures submitted by Attorney General Knox to the sub-committee of the house judiciary committee. Subsequently, when what is known as

MOODY'S ELECTION CONTESTED WHILE HIS FUNERAL WAS HELD

ASHEVILLE, N. C., Feb. 7.—The funeral of Congressman J. M. Moody was held this afternoon at Waynesville, the services being conducted by Dr. Abernathy of the Waynesville Methodist church. The congressional committee, which arrived in Waynesville on a special train in the morning to attend the funeral, was accompanied from Asheville by a large delegation of people.

While the funeral was being held the taking of testimony in the contested Moody-Gudger election case, for a seat which Mr. Moody can never occupy, went on at Tryon, in Polk county. The attorneys having the matter in charge say this regrettable procedure was rendered necessary for the reason that the taking of testimony must be concluded by February 26.

KAISER PARTY TO SECRET ALLIANCE

Germany and Italy Have Sub Rosa Compact in Venezuela Case.

BOWEN STANDS PAT

[By Associated Press to The Gazette.]

Washington, Feb. 7.—Disclosures of a secret alliance between Germany and Italy constituted the most important development in the Venezuela situation tonight. This fact has been made known to the British ambassador and it will put all of the negotiators more closely on their guard in the drafting of the protocols which they hope to submit to Minister Bowen during the next few days.

The German-Italian alliance was old news to Mr. Bowen, the fact having leaked out in Caracas before he left there. Generally speaking, the alliance is intended to secure to Italy the same treatment in the allies' settlement with Venezuela as that received by Germany and Great Britain. Mr. Bowen has made it plain both to the British ambassador and to the German minister, Baron Speck von Sternberg, that he cannot affix his signature to any protocols they may present to him which are not substantially of the same character as that to be submitted by the Italian ambassador.

All three of the first set of protocols to be signed which will contain the conditions precedent to the raising of the blockade and the provisions for referring the question of preferential treatment to The Hague for decision have been received at the Italian, British and German embassies.

Bowen Refused to Be Bluffed.

Regarding reference to The Hague, Mr. Bowen has informed the allies that he will not consent that one man be selected from the personnel of The Hague tribunal to sit as arbiter in the question of preferential treatment. He wishes that this court shall consist of three and preferably of five members.

Several more or less sensational stories have been in circulation during the last few days which have caused considerable annoyance to the British ambassador and to the other negotiators regarding the note Mr. Bowen addressed to the former on last Monday proposing that the question of preferential treatment go to The Hague. That these reports may be corrected, the negotiators are desirous that the facts be stated. On Tuesday after the sending of this note to the British ambassador, the latter called on Mr. Bowen and asked that he withdraw the entire note on the ground that it was not diplomatic in character. Mr. Bowen was compelled to refuse to grant his request. The ambassador then asked that the sentence beginning: "On this side of the water we want peace and not alliance" be withdrawn.

Refused Herbert's Request.

Again Mr. Bowen regretted that he could not grant the ambassador's request. Finally the ambassador represented that the latter part of the sentence regarding the continuance of the alliance of Great Britain with Germany and Italy would cause him embarrassment when submitted to the Italian ambassador and the German minister. Mr. Bowen replied that he would be only too glad to do anything that would further the negotiations and at once struck out the objectionable clause, which read as follows: "And it will occasion great surprise and regret when it becomes known that Great Britain has even proposed continuing her present alliance with Germany and Italy one moment longer than she must."

With this one change the note was finally transmitted by the British ambassador to the Italian and German embassies.

SCALE IS SIGNED AND PEACE REIGNS

NO CUT IS ALLOWED

[By Associated Press to The Gazette.]

Indianapolis, Ind., Feb. 7.—The miners and operators of the competitive districts agreed today upon a scale of wages for the ensuing year. The price for mining is to be increased 10 cents per ton on one and one-quarter inch screened lump coal, pick mining, in Western Pennsylvania thin vein, the Hocking, the basing district of Ohio and both the block and bituminous districts of Indiana; six cents per ton on mine run coal, pick mining, in the bituminous district of Indiana and at Danville, the basing point of Illinois.

The price of machine mining is to be increased 8 cents per ton on screened lump coal in Western Pennsylvania thin vein, and the Hocking, the basing district of Ohio; 10 cents per ton on screened lump coal in the block and bituminous districts of Indiana, and 6 cents per ton on mine run coal in the bituminous district of Indiana and at Danville, the basing point of Illinois.

The inside day wage scale is to be as follows, with the conditions of the Columbus day wage scale agreement of 1898:

Track layers, $2 56; track layers' helpers, $2 36; trappers, $1 13; bottom cagers, $2 56; drivers, $2 56; trip riders, $2 56; waterhaulers and machine helpers, $2 56; timbermen, $2 56; pipe men, for compressed air plants, $2 50; company men in long wall mines of third vein district of northern Illinois, $2 36; all other inside day labor, $2 36.

Yardage and dead work are to be advanced 12½ per cent.

In addition to the above the operators verbally agreed that outside day labor shall be increased 12½ per cent in Ohio, Illinois and Indiana, and that in the Pittsburgh district there shall be an increase of 12½ per cent, except where prices have been advanced during the present year. In these cases sufficient increase shall be granted to bring the amount up to 12½ per cent increase, and where more than 12½ per cent was secured the wages shall not be reduced.

At the meeting of the scale committee today the Indiana miners agreed to withdraw the shot-firing bill from the senate, where it is now under consideration. The operators concede that the agreement is a victory for the miners. It grants an average increase of wages for miners of 12½ per cent and 22 per cent for laborers. The miners are jubilant over the victory, and the operators say they are satisfied, because they have to be.

The joint scale committee met this morning. The northern Illinois miners held out until the last for their position on the subject of differential, and the Indiana miners resisted the efforts to persuade them to withdraw the shot-firing bill. It became evident that the conference might be disrupted if the Illinois and Indiana people did not get together, for Ohio and Western Pennsylvania were threatening to sign a scale of their own and go home. Cool counsellors, however, saved the situation.

When the miners' committee reported the scale to the convention of miners, H. A. Lanning of Blatchford, O., moved that the report of the committee be adopted and the scale signed. As a dying struggle, the Illinois thin vein miners demanded a call of the roll. This resulted in 568 votes in favor of accepting the operators' proposal, to 230 against. The miners' convention then adjourned and the joint conference convened. The scale was reported and the report was adopted.

BRYAN REFUSES SECOND FIDDLE

Kicks Over Porridge of Proposed Democratic Love Feast.

SHIES AT CLEVELAND

[By Associated Press to The Gazette.]

Chicago, Feb. 7.—William J. Bryan today declared that he would refuse to attend any banquet to which Grover Cleveland was to be invited. Col. Bryan's declaration was made through an intimate friend to the officers of the Iroquois club, which intended to invite Bryan, Cleveland and other Democratic leaders to a banquet to be held on the anniversary of Jackson's birthday, March 16.

It had been proposed to make this banquet the occasion for a national Democratic love feast. The banquet committee of the club had prepared a list of prominent Democrats to whom invitations to be present and deliver addresses were to be sent. The first name on the list was that of ex-President Grover Cleveland. The second one was that of W. J. Bryan.

Mr. Bryan passed through the city today on his way to Indiana. He saw the list of speakers that was published in the morning papers, and immediately declared that he would not attend the banquet.

"What need is there of inviting anyone else to a banquet at which Grover Cleveland is to be present?" he asked, and requested a friend to have his name stricken from the list of those who were to be invited.

In compliance with Mr. Bryan's expressed wish, Judge Tuley, president of the Iroquois club, was told of Mr. Bryan's remarks. Judge Tuley will refer the question of issuing an invitation to Col. Bryan to the banquet committee of the club.

Among the men who are to be invited are: Grover Cleveland, Horace Boies, David B. Hill, J. J. Hill, Richard Olney, William C. Whitney, Daniel Lamont, Don M. Dickinson, Henry Watterson, ex-Attorney General Harmon and Senator Bailey.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., Feb. 7.—Camp Hardee, United Confederate Veterans, today unanimously passed resolutions indorsing the bill introduced by Senator Hanna allowing pensions to ex-slaves.

EVERY CHILD HAS A GREAT CHANCE

Opportunity to acquire an education at a first-class institution of learning is afforded every child who reads or whose parents read The Gazette today. It is not often that a college is opened free of expense to the would-be student, but as will be seen in the announcement on Page 8 of Section 4 of The Gazette this morning, such a chance is now offered without money and without price to all. Every father, every mother, every child should give attention to the matter. Such chances come but once in a lifetime.

AN INTERESTING BULLETIN ISSUED ON THE CANDIDACY OF HAYMAKER AND HAYS

Information Furnished Not Alone About Candidates, but Touches Parties as Well and Words Are Not Minced.

THE VIEWS OF NON-PARTISANS

The executive committee of the Voters' Civic league, a non-partisan body, which works in a quiet, but effective manner, as was evidenced in this county in the campaign of last fall, has been investigating the political situation in Pittsburgh as it is presented in the municipal campaign now being waged and which is to be decided on Tuesday, February 17.

This investigation, like others made by the men at the head of the Voters' Civic league, has been made quietly, without blare of trumpets. The conclusions reached are set forth in a bulletin issued yesterday, which reads as follows:

Prefaced by a Foreword.

The better element of this community, for many years, have been disgusted and appalled by the shameless excesses of city administrations drunk with power. History has proven that the tendency of any political organization in control of the votes of the city, when in overwhelming majority, is toward the worst evils of bossism. The only preventive is to destroy the overwhelming majority. This can be done only by creating a body of independent voters, whose declaration of independence will include the cardinal principles of this league, namely: A municipality is a business corporation to be run on business principles; politics and partisanship should have no voice in choosing the city's officers; fitness for place and honesty when placed are the sole qualifications for those seeking election or appointment. Such a body of independent voters will be a brake upon any machine, checking its downward plunge into the depths of corruption. These independents must act as well as think. It is the vote that counts, not the opinion. It is only the coward who, doubting, fears to act. Complacent doubters have made corrupt bossism possible.

The bulletins of this league purpose placing before these honest independents information carefully collected in this election information as to parties as well as candidates. If this information shows that the livery of reform worn by either party is merely a cloak, that under its folds there are practices debauching the voters, substituting money for morals, the way of the honest voter is clear. No greater harm can befall any community than to teach the floating dishonest, purchasable vote of a large city that it can demand and receive a price. Such an example once set will remain a hideous plague for years thereafter.

Purchasing Power of Vice.

Another fact, however appalling, must be squarely faced. It is the purchasing power of vice. Those who know say that in Pittsburgh alone vice will pay $250,000 per annum, even more, to be let alone, not even to be protected. Therefore, the voter must consider not only the character of the candidate to withstand this temptation, but the influences of those in power behind him to hold up his hands.

No party, old or new, should have forced upon it a candidate who cannot command the respect of its decent members, and such a party deserves to have if it prostitutes its principles to secure the success of its candidate. The people of Pittsburgh have demanded reform in a voice too plain to be mistaken, too loud to be misunderstood, and no single election can still this cry or rob it of its ultimate efficacy. If not now, then another and yet another and another time, will the reputable element of this community demand to be heard, and the party or parties that will not heed will ultimately go down to defeat.

Without fear, favor, prejudice or original preferences, the following facts are submitted to the voters of Pittsburgh as the result of the painstaking, non-partisan research and examination of the executive committee of the Voters' Civic league.

Candidates for Recorder of Pittsburgh.

REPUBLICAN. JACKSONIAN. JOHN C. HAYMAKER—Resides at 814 South Negley avenue, 49 years of age; born in Paton township, Allegheny county; a resident of Pittsburgh for 27 years; educated at the public schools and academy, attorney-at-law since 1875; for the past eight years has been district attorney of Allegheny county, and for the six years preceding that time was assistant district attorney.

DEMOCRATIC. CITIZENS. WILLIAM B. HAYS—Resides at Dilworth and Ford streets, 36 years of age; has lived all of his life in Pittsburgh, Allegheny county; a graduate of the public schools, Western University of Pennsylvania, and Norwich Military school, president of the Pittsburgh Lumber Company of Wilmington, N. C., and purchasing agent of Dilworth, Porter & Co.; from 1887 to 1889 was a grocery commissioner, 1887-1887 was city assessor, and was delinquent tax collector under the administration of Recorder A. M. Brown.

John C. Haymaker.

Mr. Haymaker has held the office of district attorney of Allegheny county for the past eight years, and prior to that time was assistant district attorney for six years. In cases coming under his jurisdiction where attempts were made to influence his action by political pressure he has performed his whole duty unaffected by politics or politicians. The most notable instances of this was the prosecution of City Attorney Moreland and Assistant City Attorney House. He is not aggressive and has not fully exercised the powers of initiative given him by law, but has made an honorable record as a faithful and fearless officer in properly disposing of the prosecutions coming before him.

In connection with the letter regarding tax receipts, sent out under his name prior to the last election, the league reports the following facts. This letter was an attempt to make use of the office of district attorney for partisan purposes. It misstated the law, and was meant to and did intimidate many voters. It was sent out without the knowledge or consent of Mr. Haymaker. He expressed his indignation privately, but took no effectual steps to publicly repudiate it and counteract its ill effects.

The retention in office of the present county detective by Mr. Haymaker has subjected him to just criticism. The reputation of the county detective, his habits, associates and record ought to have resulted in his removal from office.

Mr. Haymaker is generally regarded in his profession as a conscientious, able and upright lawyer and man. His reputation in private life is excellent. His political activity has chiefly consisted in the making of speeches during every campaign in support of the regular Republican organization.

William B. Hays.

The opinion expressed by his business associates is that he is an able business man of considerable executive ability,

BIGELOW MAN WANTS A DUEL

Thomas McGhee Challenges C. F. Frazee to Mortal Combat.

THEY WON'T FIGHT

The campaign has reached the duel stage in the Nineteenth ward. Thomas McGhee, a Bigelow lieutenant, has challenged Charles F. Frazee, a supporter of John C. Haymaker, to a mortal combat. McGhee's letter is couched in such indecent language that its reproduction is not possible.

Mr. Frazee will not fight a duel, but has turned the letter over to his attorney, J. Negley Cook. McGhee has broken the laws of the state by writing the letter and will probably be called to account. Frazee is a fine specimen of manhood and if he chose to fight, McGhee would no doubt be sorry that he ever said his family had a record as duellists to sustain.

McGhee placed or had the letter put in Frazee's box at the flat building in which he lives in Harvard street. In addition to the indecency of the challenge, it is libelous. The fighting fiend of the boss says that for over a century his family has been sending Frenchmen to Hades by the duel route. He would like to keep up the bloody record and accord Mr. Frazee the privilege of selecting choice of weapons and seconds.

The causes leading up to the issuing of the challenge are interesting. Mr. Frazee was chairman of the Citizens party organization in the Seventh district of the Nineteenth ward and member of the ward executive committee. In the last two campaigns he was one of the most valuable lieutenants of Thomas S. Bigelow. About the first of the year D. R. Reese told him that he would like to be a school director. Mr. Frazee mentioned the matter to T. S. Bigelow, who said that Mr. Reese was the kind of man they wanted and placed him O. K. on the candidacy. January 7 the ward committee nominated Mr. Reese and George Anderson. The selection of Mr. Reese was not pleasing to E. M. Bigelow and Brother-in-law Schultz. They wanted D. L. Gillespie, a close friend of William Flinn. Thomas Bigelow was prevailed upon to induce Mr. Reese to resign and on January 14 the committee was reconvened. Reese dropped out and Gillespie was put on the ticket.

The action enraged Mr. Frazee, and that night he told D. P. Reighard, chairman of the ward committee, that he intended to resign. Reighard requested him to delay, saying that he also intended to get out of the party. Frazee did resign; Reighard did not.

Mr. Frazee did not intend to take an active part in the campaign and until a few days ago was not mixing in the fight. About that time he heard that the Citizens were telling that he slipped out at night and worked for Haymaker. This angered him, and he determined to go to work. He procured two pictures of Haymaker and placed them in his windows. Then he prepared a placard containing the names of the many ex-officials working for Hays and posted them throughout the ward. McGhee's name appeared on the list as an ex-assistant building inspector. The challenge to fight a duel followed.

Mr. Frazee says that the Bigelows are lost losing control of the ward, even though a personal payroll of 500 is maintained. He says that the Seventh district will go for Haymaker.

successful and honest in his dealings. He failed in 1886, but under circumstances not discreditable to him. His personal associations and habits have not been of a high character. He has been an active politician for years, having received his political training and acquired his political methods under the old Republican organization. During the city campaign of 1902 he was an active agent in pushing the organization of the Stalwart Republican association, and, during the county campaign of last fall, he disbursed most of the funds passing through the hands of the Citizens committee. His political training and methods, and personal traits do not inspire confidence in his ability, if elected, to administer the office for the public good. His conception of the obligations of office and his ideas of administration are those of the practical politician.

In relation to the reputation as a man of affairs, with large business interests, claimed for him by those to whom he referred the inquirer, the following facts are relevant: At No. 1207, United States district court, Pittsburgh, in bankruptcy, Mr. Hay's filed a petition, duly sworn to, on October 25, 1900, asking to be discharged as a bankrupt, and setting forth, among other things:

Liabilities (all contracted prior to 1884)	$84,630 74
Assets	126 00

He received his discharge as a bankrupt from the court on January 19, 1901.

Parties Behind the Candidates.

Equal in importance to the candidate is the influence behind the candidate. Will such influence nominate or submit to a nomination? Will it help or hinder an honest man? In this community party organization has been the paramount influence in office, and appointment to position has been at the call of the party instead of by selection for fitness. The leagues submit the following facts on the respective parties behind the candidates:

Mr. Haymaker is the candidate of the regular Republican city organization. Under the active leadership of the late Senator Magee, the Republican party in Allegheny county was well disciplined and under perfect control. For many years Senator Flinn shared with Senator Magee in this leadership. When the illness of Senator Magee prevented his giving his personal attention to the organization, Senator Flinn became a more important factor, and upon him eventually devolved the absolute control—especially after the death of Senator Magee, he then becoming the sole boss of the party. He was a domineering, arbitrary leader, brooking no interference with his power. The arbitrary manner in which he secured the dismissal of E. M. Bigelow, then director of the department of public works, created a factional fight within the organization and thereby lessened the power of Senator Flinn as a boss. E. M. Bigelow, his brother T. S. Bigelow and other disaffected members of the organization, declared war on Senator Flinn and the regular organization. More than a year ago Senator Flinn retired from the chairmanship of the organization although still exercising a great influence in the councils of the party. The defeat of the Republican city ticket last February, followed by the defeat of the county ticket last fall, has added to the demoralization of the old organization.

Flinn Relegated to the Background.

These two defeats, together with the growing opposition to him among the workers and his absorption in large business interests, have conspired to keep Senator Flinn from resuming the open leadership. His experience, recognized ability and acquaintance with the active workers of the party unite to make him a powerful factor, and he still exercises a dominating influence in the councils of the party. Prior to the recordership nomination, the Republican organization was crippled by the loss of the county patronage, by the desertion of many payrollers, and the tendency within the ranks to go over to the Citizens party. In this emergency, Senator Flinn assumed the leadership and reorganized the organization at various conferences with the Municipal League. During these conferences, various prominent citizens were discussed and the nomination tendered to several of them. Upon their declination, Senator Flinn brought out Mr. Haymaker as a candidate who would draw considerable strength from the independent voting element. Since the preceding summer his name had been discussed among organization men as an available candidate, and he was accepted by the organization as the best solution of the difficulty, and the nomination was tendered him. Upon accepting the nomination Mr. Haymaker stated to the leaders of the party that it must be understood that his acceptance was without pledges of any kind.

The Citizens-Democratic Organization.

The Citizens' party originated at a mass meeting in Old City hall in December, 1901. This meeting appointed a committee of 25 to conduct the city campaign of February, 1902. This committee, having headquarters in Fifth avenue, raised a campaign fund of about $15,000, and conducted the campaign which resulted in the election of John B. Larkin.

The Stalwart Republican association, under the direction of T. S. Bigelow, with headquarters in Third avenue, was already in existence. It took an active part in the campaign, opened headquarters in the various wards and through its various headquarters and agents expended a large amount of money in that campaign on behalf of the Citizens candidates. Its operations, however, were conducted independently from those of the Citizens' committee with its headquarters in Fifth avenue.

About April, 1902, T. S. Bigelow stated to Dr. Cadwalader Evans, chairman of the Citizens committee, that he would contribute $50,000 to a county campaign if he, Dr. Evans, would assume the chairmanship. Dr. Evans took the chairmanship, a county committee of 32 was elected by the votes of delegates from the various precinct organizations which were formed in the meantime, and had charge of the campaign. The indorsement of the Democratic organization was also secured. More than $100,000 were expended in this campaign. Mr. Hays, the present nominee for recorder being the chief disbursing agent and T. S. Bigelow furnishing a large proportion of the contributions. The election of November was followed by a reorganization of the Citizens city committee of 25 into a committee of 85, one representing each ward.

During the fall campaign, there had been a growing dissatisfaction among men connected with the Citizens organization who were not practical politicians, partly because they were gradually being excluded from the inner councils of the organization and partly because they did not approve of many of the methods used. Towards the end of the county campaign, money was lavishly expended on behalf of the Citizens ticket and in ways that were not approved by the better element of the party.

Bigelow the Dictator.

Upon the reorganization of the city committee into a committee of thirty-eight, a considerable number of these had terminated their connection with the Citizens party, and upon the nomination of Mr. Hays their example was followed by others. This nomination was dictated by Mr. Bigelow.

The present organization of the Citizens party is a compact, well-disciplined body, largely supported by the contributions of T. S. Bigelow and entirely controlled by him. While many of the men who originally joined the Citizens party with a view to bettering conditions still adhere to it, and are men of unquestioned integrity and purity of motive, the party has gathered about it a horde of the professional politicians who constituted the worst element of both the old parties, many being retained upon salaries and large numbers being paid for their political work.

The indorsement of Mr. Hays by the Democratic organization was secured through an alliance with a number of the old party workers of that body and by the use of means extremely discreditable to those who used them. This indorsement was followed by a revolt led by some of the men of high standing in the Democratic party.

As to the attitude of Senator Quay, several men who have been well known for years as lieutenants of the senator in this county are actively promoting the candidacy of Mr. Hays. This fact, the statements of the candidates and others prominently identified with the campaign on both sides, and other information in the possession of the league, warrant it in stating that, while not openly supporting either candidate, the influence of Senator Quay is with the candidate of the Citizens party.

Candidates for Select Council—Thirty-Second Ward.

REPUBLICAN.

INDEPENDENT.—JAMES REED—Resides at 11 Southern avenue; 50 years of age; born in Armstrong county, Pa.; a resident of Pittsburgh for 26 years; public school education; has been engaged in the grocery business for 20 years, from 1896 to 1898 was a member of common council of Pittsburgh from the Thirty-second ward.

HENRY POKE—Resides at 45 Bosgen avenue; 45 years of age; born in Germany; a resident of Pittsburgh for 28 years; public school education; has been engaged in the grocery business for 20 years, from 1896 to 1898 was a member of common council of Pittsburgh from the Thirty-second ward.

Both of these candidates are, by reputation, honest, industrious and successful in business, although not men of quick intelligence, in their politics and political affiliations they have in the past been independent.

While a member of common council (1896-1898), Mr. Poke showed that he lacked the ability and firmness for consistent independent action; but, in general he adhered to the platform of the Municipal league upon which ticket he had been elected) and followed the leaders of that faction in council.

Candidates for Common Council—Twenty-Second Ward.

REPUBLICAN.

BERNE H. EVANS—Resides at 1045 South Negley avenue; 25 years of age; born in Pittsburgh; college education (Yale), also graduate of Harvard Law school; attorney-at-law, having been admitted to the bar in September, 1902; never held office.

DEMOCRATIC CITIZENS.

WILLIAM B. WOLFE—Resides at Forbes street and Morewood avenue; 46 years of age; college education (Princeton); born in Pittsburgh; has been a brush manufacturer for 20 years; never held office.

Mr. Evans is a young man just starting the practice of law. He stood well in his classes at college and law school.

Mr. Wolfe has been engaged in business in this city for over twenty years, and with success. He is the senior partner of the firm of Wolfe, Walker & Co., Ltd., brush manufacturers.

These candidates are both men of intelligence and integrity, fitted by education and association to become factors in the proceedings of councils and a credit to the ward and to the city.

Candidates for Common Council—Sixteenth Ward.

REPUBLICAN.

WILLIAM T. MARTIN—Resides at 4856 Penn avenue; 30 years of age; born in Pittsburgh; educated at public schools and business college; for seven years, until August 1, 1902, was superintendent of the American Reduction Company, but has lately gone into business for himself as a building contractor; has never held office.

CITIZENS.

CALVIN M. A. WILLEY—Resides at 4350 Mifflin street; 45 years of age; born in Somerset county, Pa.; a resident of Pittsburgh for 30 years; at present employed as an engineer at the Upper Union mills; was formerly employed in the Pittsburgh fire department and as an engineer in the water department of the city; a school director in the Sixteenth ward for nine years.

the Littlefield bill was reported to the house the Standard Oil Company's counsel began to devote their opposition particularly to the Nelson amendment to section six of the department of commerce bill—the amendment which contains practically the publicity features of the Knox anti-trust bill.

They used their utmost efforts to prevent its favorable consideration. They were unsuccessful, as the bill, with that amendment, was agreed upon unanimously today by the conferees of the two branches of congress. The action of the conferees was received, it is understood, with satisfaction by the officials of the administration as it is regarded as a long and essential step toward the kind of anti-trust legislation that both the president and Attorney General Knox believe will be effective. It is this legislation particularly that the Standard Oil Company so vigorously objects to and which it hoped might be headed off or emasculated, through the appeals made to senators before it reached the stage of actual passage.

It is said, by authority, that the administration hopes that the Elkins rebate bill, which was passed by the senate this week, will be passed also by the house. While this measure, too, is opposed by those who are in favor of no trust legislation, the special opposition to it does not come from the Standard Oil Company, because, it is explained, that corporation has grown beyond any effects the enforcement of such legislation might have upon it.

Tonight the efforts being made to defeat or emasculate pending anti-trust legislation formed the subject of some animated conferences. Indeed, the subject is likely to be developed in some detail in congress. One of the recipients of the telegram signed by "John D. Rockefeller," said:

"No such formidable weapon ever has been put in the hands of one man by another in a legislative contest as put in my hands by the sender of that telegram. If necessary, I will rise in my place in the senate and read it. Then we will see whether any votes are to be recorded against the legislation at which these efforts are being directed."

Cock Fight in North Braddock.

Well-known sports from Pittsburgh, Millvale and Charleroi last night pulled off a chicken fight in the stable of James Noland, in North Braddock. There were about 20 birds engaged in the fight, and about 150 men were present. There was plenty of money on hand for betting purposes. The men who attended the fight went to North Braddock in the street cars and wagons, going through the Braddock cemetery on foot to reach the secluded spot where the cocking main is located. The men returned to town about 4 o'clock this morning.

Burned in Gas Explosion.

Albert Neal, aged 16 years, the son of W. B. Neal of Thomas street, Sewickley, was badly burned about the face and hands in a gas explosion at his home last night. The furnace was out of order and young Neal went to fix it, and the explosion resulted.

MAKES VOTES IN HAYS OWN WARD

FOUR BIG MEETINGS HELD

Four meetings filled with the enthusiasm that greets the candidacy of John C. Haymaker all over the city were held last evening. At each of the meetings the halls were crowded and the speakers made hits of the kind that bring votes.

Mr. Haymaker carried the war into the enemy's country. He spoke to a large gathering at Turner hall, in Forbes street, in the Sixth ward, the home of William B. Hays. He made votes for himself by his address, and other speakers were heard with him.

In the Thirty-second ward over 500 independent voters met and adopted resolutions denouncing all rings and bosses and placing the new boss in as bad a light as the old one ever was.

German-Americans to the number of 300 filled Lorelei hall, in Fingal street, Duquesne Heights, heard addresses in both their native and adopted languages and passed resolutions expressing their fidelity to the Haymaker cause.

One of the best attended meetings of the campaign was that held last night by the Republicans in Turner hall, Forbes street, and John C. Haymaker won a great number of new friends in the home ward of his opponent. The hall was well filled before Haymaker and the other speakers arrived.

All Bosses Look Alike.

After the meeting had been called to order by the chairman of the ward committee, David J. Owens, Edward Steiner made the first address. He said all bosses looked alike to him, but it was the duty of all to vote against bossism, especially the attempted bossism of the Bigelows. "You have been fighting bosses," he said, "but now you are fighting only the shadow of a boss. They who now cry down with the bosses mean down with the Bigelows, and so say I."

Morgan E. Gable was the next speaker, and in part said:

I would like to see the man who could boss John C. Haymaker. Such a man has been looking for him for 14 years, but he gave up the job as a bad one. John C. Haymaker is his own boss. Once I knew when he appeared before the pardon board, word was sent to him that did not quite approve pardon for a certain man, he never would be judge in Allegheny county, and Haymaker said, "I will be right if I am not judge."

J. McF. Carpenter said the duty of the voter is to select the candidates from men, not parties, more especially for municipal and county offices. "Do as I have done and select the best man. I am not going to attack any one's character, because it would be all one-sided—no one can truthfully assail the character of John C. Haymaker."

"No man," said the speaker could ever attack the character of John C. Haymaker. Never was a dishonest act charged against him. He has always fought for and won right and justice."

Haymaker Given an Ovation.

John C. Haymaker was greeted with great applause, and said he was not physically able to make a long speech. He said that there was no foundation for the story that his nomination for recorder had been agreed on at a camp in Canada last summer. He reaffirmed that he did not know he was to be the candidate till the Monday night before the convention. He said he was not the candidate of Senator William Flinn at any stage of the game, but that Flinn was in favor of Maj. A. P. Burchfield or Dr. Evans.

"Flinn said," continued the speaker, "that I would not do, and that it would be poor politics to nominate me. It is not true that I am a Flinn creation. I know he is out of politics, and if I were his creation too, would be wiped out. Flinn is out of politics, and he means to stay out. He said his political sun had set, and he never expected or wanted to see it rise.

"I stand free-handed before you. I have made no pledges or promises to any one, except the people whose vote I ask. I am bound to no man by any deal, promise or hope of reward or gain, and I am my own man in every sense of the word. I will keep the promise I made in my letter of acceptance, and I mean all I said in that letter."

Stengel Was Vigorous.

George H. Stengel concluded the meeting and made a vigorous speech. He said the last election was bought with Bigelow's money, and he knew it, and he feared the same money would be used against such a candidate as John C. Haymaker. He said he admitted there was a ring, but the worst element was composed of the Bigelows, and he was glad they were out of it.

An enthusiastic crowd of over 500 independent voters of the Thirty-second ward last night filled Maennerchor hall in Southern avenue, where one of the best meetings of the campaign was held. Albert York Smith was made chairman and in a short speech told why he had left the Citizens party. He said he knew John C. Haymaker and that he was the most qualified man in the city for recorder.

As to the charge that Haymaker is controlled by Flinn, the speaker made a vigorous denial. He told of a conversation he had with Thomas Bigelow and Hays after the death of Select Councilman John Paul, in which they declared that Peter Soffel should be boss of the Thirty-second ward, and that the independent party that had aided in electing John B. Larkin controller should support the candidates he named. It was after the November election that the independent party determined to cut loose from the Citizens party that had fallen into disrepute, and adhere to the principles for which it was formed and support only the best candidates for office.

Advice to Democrats.

Charles A. O'Brien began by saying:

No Democrat who has any respect for himself or his party should be found in the Bigelow ranks. The Democratic convention betrayed the party when it indorsed Hays. The Citizens movement was started by the good people, with good purposes, and offered the public good candidates. When the movement was a success T. S. Bigelow thought he could use it to create a machine for himself and he is now attempting to use it for his own purposes. Bigelow never intended to nominate any other man than Hays. The nomination was offered to men who it was known would not accept. Through corruption he had the Democratic convention confirm the nomination of Hays. The best element of the Citizens party has left it as it has lost the title to the name.

O'Brien spoke of the large sums of money being used in the efforts of the would-be boss, as he called him, to land Hays in the recordership. The speaker declared that he could clearly show that Hays was not the choice of any party, and said he had been taken out of the box by Bigelow, whose candidate he is, and put him forward as the Citizens nominee for recorder. Bigelow, he said, has great faith in the power of money to corrupt a sufficient number of voters to elect his candidate. In referring to the charge that Flinn is behind Haymaker, he said it was not true, but that of the two men he preferred Flinn to Bigelow.

The speaker caused considerable amusement in reading a list of ex-Republicans who compose the so-called Citizens party, and commented on their records, showing that they were entirely out of place in a reform movement. He referred to the needless expense incurred by E. M. Bigelow when he was director of public works, mentioning several instances where public money was wasted. The Grant boulevard was spoken of as a "monument of stupidity."

Says Money Would Come Back.

"Whence comes this lavish wealth Bigelow is using to defeat the will of the people?" the speaker asked. All the money that is being put into the campaign to elect Hays, the speaker declared, will come back if Hays is elected, and the people of Pittsburgh will be the sufferers. T. S. Bigelow, it was charged, has done more to demoralize the politics of the city than any 10 men that ever took an active part in public affairs.

H. G. Wasson opened by saying he was a Republican and came from the Twentieth ward. He explained that while he was a Republican he voted for the best candidate, irrespective of party. "The only thing they urge against Haymaker," he said, "is that he will only be Flinn. Although this is not true, I would rather have him than Bigelow."

The meeting concluded, after short addresses by Herman L. Grote and William McClure, and the adoption of the following resolutions introduced by Robert J. McCrory:

Whereas, The people of the Thirty-second ward have been controlled by rings and bosses for many years, and have, at last February's election, been deprived of their rights from power, to the great benefit of the ward;

Whereas, The people's victory has been used as a stepping stone for a new boss to attempt to get to absolute power in the ward;

Whereas, This new boss desires to force his own personal wishes and orders upon the people of this ward, without consulting them as to the candidates for public office;

Resolved, By the independent people of the Thirty-second ward in mass meeting assembled, that they repudiate this new boss and his ring rule, and that they will on election day HALT forever this boss and his whole family and retire them to oblivion.

Germans Indorse Haymaker.

John C. Haymaker's candidacy for the recordership of Pittsburgh was indorsed amid great enthusiasm at a meeting of the German-Americans of the Thirty-fifth ward at Loreley hall, Fingal street, Duquesne heights.

Upward of 500 men were present at the meeting, the hall being crowded. The chairman of the meeting was Constantin Conrad, aged 75 years, one of the veteran members of Turner societies of Pittsburgh. In his address he urged those present to take an active part throughout the remainder of the campaign in the interest of the Republican ticket.

The next speaker was Dr. A. Barenfeld, whose address was in English. He pointed out that with the withdrawal of the support of the Bigelows the Citizens party will die, while the Republican party, being built on sound principles, will last forever.

"Haymaker, the Friend of Germans" was the theme of Ernest Walter, Christian Saam and A. F. Haeling, who addressed the meeting in German. The resolutions were offered and passed unanimously.

Where Tighe Stands.

Great enthusiasm was manifested at the meeting in Verner hall, in Mathilda street, Nineteenth ward. The hall was crowded to the doors and many voters were unable to find even standing room. M. F. Tighe, assistant secretary of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers, was made permanent chairman. He made an eloquent appeal to the voters of the ward to stand on their manhood and vote for John C. Haymaker for recorder. He defined his position in the campaign, speaking in part as follows:

I want to say to you that while I am secretary of the Amalgamated association I do not come before you as a representative of that organization. I want to make it plain to you that the association is a non-political organization, we not taking any side in this campaign, and in making this statement I wish to deny the report that the association had tacitly indorsed the candidacy of William B. Hays. It has not indorsed Mr. Hays nor any other candidate for city recorder.

I voted the Citizens ticket during the past two campaigns because I believed the party stood for those reforms the people of Pittsburgh are seeking to inculcate into the management of the municipal government. I deserted the Citizens party this spring because I believed it has forsaken the principles for which it was organized. It has succumbed to the dictation of one man, who has shown his hand and his desire to absolutely control nominations and elections. That is the reason, we are just rising to our manhood. I believe the Republican party has been rejuvenated; new blood has been insufled into it; evil methods have been cast aside; a nomination has been made untrammeled and uninfluenced by one man power, and I shall stand by the party because I believe it has taken up the thread of reform whence the Citizens party laid it down.

His Opinion of Haymaker.

In conclusion, I want to say that I am for John C. Haymaker for city recover because I believe he is qualified morally, mentally and socially for the place. He is a man of high character; he has served the county well in the capacity of district attorney; he is a man of highest integrity, a gentleman, a scholar, a churchman and an all-round good citizen. No man can make a mistake in casting his vote for John C. Haymaker. He stands for right, and he stands for reform in our municipal government, which we would never get under a regime of Thomas S. Bigelow and William B. Hays.

George J. Churchill, a Democrat, said:

There is no Democratic candidate for city recorder. Why should Democrats vote for William B. Hays? He is not a Democrat. He stole the Democratic indorsement. Now, we Democrats have a ticket that we can vote. It is the Jacksonian ticket, and the nomination of John C. Haymaker on that ticket was not stolen.

John I. Brown, a Jacksonian Democrat, and one of the leaders in that movement, spoke briefly, calling attention to the conduct of certain so-called Democratic leaders who had been paid $15,000 to force the nomination of Hays in the West End convention.

Other speakers were George H. Stengel, Samuel D. Warmcastle, Stephen Boyle and Charles Frazee. The latter was challenged to fight a duel. Mr. Frazee said that he believed he could make 90 out of every 100 shots with a rifle, he having been one of the crack shots of the Keystone Sportsmen's association for several years, and he believes he can prove to his opponents in the Citizens party that he is also a pretty good shot at getting votes at the polls on election day.

Larkin's Figures Show Large Deficiency For Year 1903

Estimates of receipts of the city for the fiscal year of 1903, made yesterday by Controller Larkin, show a large deficiency for the end of the year, although the controller attempts to figure that there will be plenty of money to meet all expenditures. The controller says the total receipts will be $6,915,964.

That there will be a deficiency is shown by the fact that the controller includes an estimate of $500,000 for delinquent taxes. It is well-known that there is about this amount of taxes delinquent every year, and that all that will be collected during the present year will simply off-set what is due from last year. If there had been no delinquent taxes from 1902 there would be none to collect in 1903, and the deficiency in the city treasury for 1902 results partly from the non-collection of taxes.

This deficiency has always been provided for in the annual appropriations for the year following. As shown by The Gazette yesterday the deficiency will be near $500,000, for the controller's statement shows that no provision is made to pay off this deficiency from last year.

The receipts from city taxes is based upon a total valuation of $321,900,000, less $3,900,000 for exonerations and $3,800,000 on which a city tax is levied. From this is deducted $700,000 for delinquent taxes that will accrue this year. The controller's list of estimates is as follows:

City tax, $3,750,000; water rents, $825,000; wharves, $18,000; recorder's office, $75,000; markets, $57,000; vehicle licenses, $60,000; city gauger, $3,000; warrant from state, $235,000; advertising tax liens, $6,200; liquor licenses, $500,000; interest on bank balances, $126,000; annual car tax, $25,000; city attorney's collections, $235,000; miscellanies, $168,236; from state for Firemen's R. & B. association, $12,600; insurance on Tunnel street property, $7,078; from sale of Eleventh ward property, $14,855; delinquent taxes to be collected, $800,000.

AMENDMENTS WERE PROMPTLY VOTED DOWN

clever trust lawyers of New York had prepared the pending bill. He said at one time he thought Mr. Littlefield was sincere, but that he was now reluctantly compelled to give the opinion that the bill of the trust buster from Maine was "seven pounds lighter than a straw hat." Mr. Sulzer said he believed the president was honestly attempting to accomplish something. The difficulty was that his party would not support him. The pending bill was as ineffectual as a "putty blower would be to stop an elephant on the rampage."

Mr. Henry (Dem., Texas) introduced as a new section an amendment to place steel rails, binding twine, paper and some other articles on the free list. To it Mr. Littlefield made a point of order. This matter was allowed to go over until the reading of the bill was completed.

A number of other amendments were offered to the first section, and all were voted down. Mr. De Armond (Mo.) finally moved that debate on section 1 close, and his motion led to a sharp personal clash with Mr. Littlefield.

"Has the gentleman taken charge of the bill?" asked Mr. Littlefield.

Opposing Leaders Clash.

"I will say to the gentleman from Maine," replied Mr. De Armond, "that I do not think there is any suggestion that anybody is 'taking charge of the bill,' and there might be some reasons to suggest that not very much of anybody has had 'charge of the bill.' I wish to reach a point where amendments that we have prepared will be voted on, and I do not care to play into the hands of the gentleman from Maine or anybody else who may be disposed to fritter away time on this occasion."

Mr. Littlefield: "Let me ask the gentleman. Does he undertake to intimate that 'the gentleman from Maine' has been responsible for any of these delays?"

Mr. De Armond: "I undertake to say that the suggestion of the gentleman that somebody was trying to 'take charge of this bill' is entirely gratuitous; and the better sense of the gentleman from Maine and the better manners of the gentleman from Maine ought to make him aware of that fact."

Mr. Littlefield: "I trust the gentleman knows that the 'gentleman from Maine' did not intend to be personally offensive to the gentleman from Missouri; at least, if he does not appreciate that fact, the 'gentleman from Maine' desires to so state."

At the expiration of the three hours allowed for the consideration of amendments under the special order the committee of the whole rose and without intervening motion the vote was taken upon the passage of the bill.

CONFEREES AGREE ON DISPUTED POINTS

Department of Commerce Will Not Include Interstate Commerce Commission.

[By Associated Press to The Gazette.]

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7.—The bill creating a department of commerce and labor was agreed upon by the conference of both houses today, and it expected that in the form agreed upon it will become a law.

The main point of difference has been in relation to the interstate commerce commission and by the terms of the bill this commission cannot be transferred to the new department. The house amendment authorizing the transferring of bureaus by the president provides that statistical bureaus may be transferred from every executive department except the department of agriculture, and the intent in specifying from what departments transfers may be made is to prevent the transfer of either the interstate commerce commission or the bureau of statistics in the agricultural department.

The new department will consist of the bureau of corporations, the bureau of labor, the lighthouse board, the lighthouse establishment, the steamboat inspection service, the bureau of navigation, the bureau of standards, the coast and geodetic survey, the commissioner general of immigration, the commissioners of immigration, the bureau of immigration and the immigration service at large, the bureau of statistics of the treasury department, the bureau of navigation, the shipping commissioner, the bureau of foreign commerce now in the department of state, the census bureau and the fish commission.

BIG SNOW STORM HEADED THIS WAY

Washington Weather Bureau Predicts Heavy Fall of Snow in Pittsburgh Today.

Heavy snowstorms are predicted for Pittsburgh today by the Washington weather bureau, which at 9 o'clock last night sent out to Western Pennsylvania, Eastern Ohio and West Virginia warnings to be prepared for an unusually heavy fall of snow during today. The atmosphere will be also somewhat colder by this evening. For tomorrow fair conditions are predicted locally.

The storm which is headed this way is coming from the Mississippi valley. The rainfall at Cairo was .28, at Vixburg 1.12, Memphis .36, Indianapolis .16. Snow was reported falling as far south as Oklahoma last night. The rain storm is working its way eastward from the Mississippi valley, and back of this storm there is a cold area coming from the southwestern section of the United States which it is expected will cause the big fall of snow in this section.

WOODBURN GIVEN FINE RECEPTION

Big Mass Meeting of Republicans in Tenth Ward, Allegheny.

LABOR IS REPRESENTED

Prominent Union Men Make Speeches in Which Wyman Is Denounced — Prediction That Citizens Cannot Carry 6 Wards

A rousing meeting of the Tenth ward, Allegheny, Republicans was held last night in the Republican Progressive Association hall in Charles street. The hall was packed to the doors by a representative audience that applauded enthusiastically each of the speakers. The latter were Francis J. Torrance, Dr. S. S. Woodburn, the Rev. J. D. McClenahan of the Western Theological seminary, Joseph Henry, representing the Bricklayers' union; George Shaman, ex-president of select council; S. S. Robertson and W. H. Baird, representing the order of Railroad Conductors. This unusual representation of organized labor in a political meeting was a remarkable feature of the gathering.

In his talk Dr. Woodburn spoke convincingly of his attitude as the candidate of the Republican party, saying that he had made no pledges or promises to anyone, and that in the event of his election he would administer the affairs of the city government in a clean, honest manner. Dr. Woodburn slapped Wyman by saying that he was opposed to perpetual officeholding, and that a man that was ever seeking to fill the seat of chief executive had his own interests rather than those of the public at heart. In the event of his election Dr. Woodburn said he would make all the reform changes that any honest man would.

The speech by City Chairman Torrance was brief. He told of his life-long friendship with Dr. Woodburn, and challenged anyone in Allegheny to bring forward anything against the character of the Republican nominee.

The Way to Save Disgrace.

The Rev. J. D. McClenahan said that he would like to speak to every young man in Allegheny that he might advise him to vote for a candidate whose character was above reproach and whose election will be an honor to the city of Allegheny. "To show honor to such a man as J. O. Wyman," said the Rev. Mr. McClenahan, "would be a disgrace to the citizens of Allegheny. I have four sons of a voting age and as a father I hope that all young men in the city will vote against a man whose election would shame the municipality." The speech brought sheers from the large crowd.

Joseph Henry of the Bricklayers' union declared that after making a canvass of the city, he could truthfully say that three-fourth of the organized laboring men in Allegheny would cast their votes for Dr. Woodburn. J. G. Wyman, he said, was a foe to organized labor and had shown this by his opposition to the presentation of the employers' liability bill at the last session of the state legislature.

In a strong speech S. S. Robertson told how that Wyman, when in office 10 years ago, wrongfully used his power and oppressed the laboring people he could.

The talks of Mr. Baird and Mr. Shaman were brief and were well received. Mr. Baird declared that organized labor would be against Wyman solidly because the example he has shown that he is an enemy of union labor. He told the people bold that J. G. Wyman is a friend of the poor man is erroneous," said Mr. Baird, "because he has about him a gang of rough fellows is not proof that he is the friend of the laboring man. Those followers of his are not working men, but make a living in working politics on the cheapest scale."

Woodburn Really Charitable.

Mr. Shaman spoke of his long acquaintanceship with both candidates for recorder, and said that he had always known Dr. Woodburn as a man of high sterling character who, as a physician of independent fortune, had done more real charity in Allegheny than J. G. Wyman could do if he were to leave politics now and devote his time to charity exclusively.

The way that public sentiment has changed in all parts of the city in favor of the Republican party during the past week is causing alarm in the Wyman ranks. The great army of workers that was placed in the field by Senator Charles Muehlbronner is daily sending in reports that presage a great victory for the Republican party. Louis K. White, one of the most experienced politicians in Allegheny, last night gave out the first prediction as to the result of the election next week. He declares that J. G. Wyman cannot carry six wards, and that his estimate is a conservative one.

One well-known First ward worker reported last night at Republican headquarters that five of the six district chairmen of the Wyman party in the First ward would today declare themselves in favor of Dr. Woodburn and the ward Republican ticket. He had, he said, no authority to speak for any of the men in question, but told Assistant Secretary Frank Haller that each of the five would himself announce his determination to work against Wyman from now until election day.

Charles Reymer, candidate for select council in the First ward, yesterday bet $6,000 with a party of Wyman men in the ward that he would be elected to council, and that Wyman would not get the First ward by more than 100 votes. The First is Wyman's stronghold, and the willingness of the Republicans to take any amount of Wyman money is making the Wyman crowd uneasy. The latter include the election of John Dailey and Samuel W. Carpenter to the common branch of councils, but boast that Beymer will be defeated.

MRS. GRACE YANCY TAKES HER LIFE

Sent Bullet Into Her Heart at Hotel Lamont in Spahr Street and Dies Afterward.

Mrs. Grace Yancy, wife of A. B. Yancy, shot herself in her room at the Hotel Lamont, Spahr street, East End, at 7 o'clock last evening and died at the West Penn hospital shortly before midnight. Mr. Yancy has a suite at the Lamont, and was with his wife in their sitting room last evening. Mrs. Yancy excused herself and quietly walked into another room, and the next moment her husband heard the sound of a pistol shot.

He ran into the room and found his wife on the floor with her dress covered with blood. Dr. Foster was called in at once and found her condition so serious that he sent for Dr. MacFarland. They decided to send her to the West Penn hospital.

Mrs. Yancy shot herself in the left side, below the heart, and despite the efforts of the doctors, sank steadily. The body was sent to the morgue.

Mrs. Yancy was 24 years old. With her husband she came here from New York in January, taking rooms at the Lamont. Nothing could be learned last night as to any motive that would lead to self-destruction.

MAY HAVE MURDERERS OF CHIEF OF POLICE

Turtle Creek Man Confesses One of Three Who Caused Chief McKeag's Death.

Police officials of East Pittsburgh and Turtle Creek believe that within a week the mystery surrounding the sudden death about two years ago of James McKeag, the former chief of police of East Pittsburgh, will be solved. Last night Officers Thomas Sullivan and John O'Brien locked up "Sandy" Ferguson, 22 years old, of Turtle Creek, on a charge of being implicated in the killing.

Ferguson and two companions had a quarrel in an East Pittsburgh saloon last night. From bystanders it was learned that threats were freely used among the men. Suddenly Ferguson walked away from his companions, and on stepping into the street went up to Policeman Sullivan and said:

"You may as well arrest me now for the murder of Chief of Police McKeag, as those fellows will tell on me anyhow." Officers Sullivan and O'Brien took Ferguson to the lockup, where he is said to have told the whole story of the killing of McKeag, which caused a sensation at the time of the latter's death. Ferguson is said to have given up the names of his companions, who escaped from the saloon when they saw Ferguson walk toward Officer Sullivan. Early this morning the East Pittsburgh and Turtle Creek police were making a thorough search for Ferguson's companions, and believe that they will bring them in before daylight.

Chief of Police McKeag about two years ago was given a warrant for the arrest of a man named Huff on a charge of horse stealing. McKeag went to Brinton to arrest his man, but failed to find him and returned to East Pittsburgh by the way of the Union railroad bridge, under which his dead body was found the next morning. Although a coroner's jury pronounced McKeag's death accidental at the inquest, it was never believed that he fell throught the bridge and was killed.

Ferguson, it is alleged, told the police after his arrest last night that he and his two companions killed McKeag out of revenge, as McKeag had arrested them a number of times.

one Englishman, two Dutchman and two Spaniards, representing the foreign residents of Caracas, have informed W. W. Russell, secretary of the American legation, that next Tuesday the city of Caracas would be without illuminating gas, and that as a result great fear is felt for the safety of life and property under such conditions.

In view of the existing political situation the committee requested Mr. Russell to use his good offices in the name of the foreign communities of this city with the commanding officers of the blockading warships to secure their permission for the landing at La Guayra of a cargo of coal which is now on board ship at Curacao. It is understood that Mr. Russell has referred the matter to Washington.

The revolutionary committee located in Caracas is much disheartened at the receipt of news that Gen. Luciano Mendoza, who is reported to have gone to Curacoa, was obliged to abandon the revolutionary cause because his men lacked ammunition. It is considered by many persons here that the revolution, notwithstanding the blockade, is practically at an end.

TRUST COMPANY WITHDRAWS SUIT

Mandamus Case Affecting 68 Counties Will Not Be Decided by Court.

SECOND NATIONAL WINS

Act of Assembly May Correct Technical Weakness of Existing Law—No Sounder Institutions Than Trust Companies.

The question raised as to whether or not trust companies in Pennsylvania come under the meaning of the act of 1870, requiring county depositories to be selected from banks, banking houses or regular exchange brokers, and which was expected to be settled by the decision of the judges in common pleas court No. 3, in the mandamus proceedings brought by the Pennsylvania Trust company against County Treasurer David F. Collingwood, directing him to show cause why it should not be selected as a depository for county funds, still remains an open one, the trust company having withdrawn its proceedings yesterday, thereby permitting Treasurer Collingwood to select the Second National bank as a depository without further contest.

Ending Was a Surprise.

This came as a great surprise to all the banking institutions and trust companies that were watching the suit, for it promised at the start to result in a contest that would go through the supreme court. The contest was stopped at noon, yesterday, after arguments were heard before Judges McClung and Evans. D. T. Watson and Chantler, McGill & McClung represented the Second National bank; Patterson, Sterrett & Acheson and Willis F. McCook represented the trust company, while G. H. Calvert represented Treasurer Collingwood and made the argument in his behalf.

The case was of vast importance—not as affecting the standing of trust companies, because they are under state control, have large capitals and surpluses, and are sound financial institutions, and under the acts of 1889 and 1895 are permitted and authorized to receive deposits of money and other personal property and issue their obligations therefor, which practically makes them banking institutions—but as regards the deposits of 68 counties in the state and affecting their standing under the act of 1870, which is held not to include trust companies under the heading of regular banks, doing business subject to check.

Contended on a Technicality.

It was not contended by Treasurer Collingwood that trust companies were not as sound or as good financial institutions as banks, or that they were not thoroughly capable of taking care of and handling county funds, but it was held that until further act of assembly affecting their technical standing and placing them in the available lists as bidders for the vast sums collected and disbursed in every county in the state, they could not be held available, nor could they be made depositories by the various county treasurers.

Attorney Calvert argued the mandamus proceedings for Treasurer Collingwood, and prepared a brief covering 16 pages to sustain his position in the matter. He argued that the powers of trust companies were not the same as those of banks, under the act regulating the county depositories, and submitted a similar case from Missouri, in which quo warranto proceedings against five Missouri trust companies were begun, to forfeit their charters. While the courts refused to forfeit the charters, they prohibited the trust companies from taking deposits subject to check.

How the Arguments Were Made.

The Missouri laws regulating trust companies, however, are not the same as the Pennsylvania laws, and the case had but little application to the present mandamus proceedings, in that the Pennsylvania acts of assembly permits trust companies to receive deposits subject to check, and regulates them so that they are in every sense as safe as any banking institution.

Attorney J. B. Sterrett argued the matter for the Pennsylvania Trust Company, holding that the law applied to trust companies, even if they were not in existence when the act of 1870 was passed. Later acts provided for trust companies to receive money, hold the same and issue their obligations for it, and gave them the same powers as banks and banking houses. The only difference, he argued, was in the name. He had prepared a brief to show that trust companies should not be barred under the act of 1870 simply because they were not specifically named in connection therewith.

Law Is to Be Amended.

A short consultation was held after the arguments, and the trust company decided to withdraw its suit and permit Treasurer Collingwood to select the Second National bank.

Treasurer Collingwood was seen after the case was dismissed, but refused to discuss the situation. He said that his position must have been right, and that he would notify the Second National bank that it was the regular depository for the county funds.

Attorneys for the trust company refused to say why they had taken this action. It is said that an act of assembly will be introduced, amending the act of 1870 to include trust companies as depositories for county funds, which will settle the question without further litigation. This act is now being prepared.

SCROGGS TO BE HELD.

Coroner Investigates the Killing of Anthony Good.

Charles Kurtz was held yesterday by the coroner's jury to await the action of the grand jury on a charge of killing Anthony Good in Second avenue on January 28. Fannie Williams of No. 417 Second avenue was held as an accessory after the fact. The jury also recommended that George Scroggs, a lineman, who was with Kurtz on the night he is alleged to have struck the fatal blow, be apprehended and held as an accessory before the fact.

Supt. P. K. Bechtel of the Homeopathic hospital was the first witness to testify. He explained how he followed the man who struck Good to No. 417 Second avenue. Later he identified Kurtz as the man he saw strike Good and enter No. 417. Mabel Sherwood of No. 423 Second avenue, who witnessed the fight, told how Good and Kurtz went at each other. Good was intoxicated and told Kurtz "that he thought he was more of a man."

After making this remark Kurtz knocked Good down. Then he rained several blows in Good's face and left when Mabel Sherwood told him to stop hitting Good, because he was intoxicated. She said Kurtz and his companion went away. Mabel Sherwood identified Kurtz as the man who struck Good. Several other witnesses testified as to the whereabouts of Good on the night he was killed.

NEW ST. COLEMAN'S CHURCH WILL BE PRIDE OF TURTLE CREEK VALLEY

The new St. Coleman's Catholic church, the finest church building in the Turtle Creek valley, is fast nearing completion and the congregation and contractors are hoping to have it ready for dedication by Easter. The structure is located at Larimer avenue and Osborn street. It is built of terra cotta brick, with Cleveland stone trimmings. It is of the Romanesque style of architecture with transept, and the entire length will be 137 feet; it is 68 feet wide in transept and 56 feet in the nave. Five chapels are devoted to altars. The building is surmounted by two towers, one over 150 feet high, the other 89. The interior will be beautifully painted in oils and finished in wood. The main altar, in the sanctuary, will be 30 feet deep. The style of all the altars in the building will conform with the general structure and will be of wood, richly carved and painted white. They are now being placed.

Rev. Father William Cunningham.

Figured windows, representing the life of Christ from the Annunciation to the Ascension, have been placed in the building and are works of art. These windows, with all other windows in the church, have been donated by Branch 76, C. M. B. A.; L. C. B. A., Knights of St. John, Ancient Order of Hibernians, Children's sodality and private families. Beautiful statuary, representing St. Coleman, St. Mary, St. Joseph, Sacred Heart, St. Aloysius, St. Anthony, St. Patrick, St. Bridget and Pieta will add to the interior decorations.

A peal of chimes will be placed in the large tower of the building and the entire building will be lighted with electric light furnished by a power plant that is being erected in the basement. Some 700 lights will be used. The six interior pillars will be entwined with lights set in grape vines of Venetian iron and a circular group of 50 will be used in the sanctuary arch. Inside the large sanctuary there will be a group of invisible lights, which will throw a strong reflection upon the altar. Work on the structure was started in March, 1891, and the corner stone was laid in June of the same year. The architect is F. C. Sauer and the contractor is F. E. McGillick.

St. Coleman's congregation is one of the largest in the Pittsburgh diocese, numbering about 500 families. The rector is the Rev. William A. Cunningham and his assistant is the Rev. John Moore. The dedication promises to be one of the largest events of its kind ever held in the Turtle Creek valley. Completed, the church will cost about $75,000.

LICENSE PAPERS ARE ALL FILED

Applications to Sell Liquor Exceed Those of Last Year by 48.

NEW BREWERIES IN LIST

Nixon and Zimmerman Want Privilege to Open Restaurant in New Theater Building on Sixth Avenue.

Clerk of Courts F. X. Barr kept his office open until 6 o'clock last night in order to give applicants for liquor license a final chance to file their papers. When the doors closed 2,059 applications of all kinds had been received, an increase of 48 over last year, when 2,011 were filed. The retail applications increased 19, McKeesport and the boroughs being responsible for this, as Pittsburgh, Allegheny and the townships each show a decrease. Wholesale applicants increased 34, every division of the county taking part in this except the townships, where the figures are unchanged. The brewers have the same total, but one old applicant drops out and two new ones come in. There was one refusal last year, and if all the applicants should be granted licenses, there will be a net gain of one brewery in the county. The bottlers drop from 16 to 13, the number now holding license.

The following table shows the applications of this year and the number of those who applied and were granted or refused a license last year:

Among the retail applications is one for the basement of the new theater Nixon & Zimmerman are to build in Sixth avenue. Miller's restaurant, now at Wood street and Sixth avenue, applies for the property now occupied by C. Schlagel's grocery in Sixth avenue, near Grant street. The brewery that has dropped out is the Braddock Brewing Company, and the two new ones are the Liberty Brewing Company and the Highland Brewing Company.

There was not so much of a last-day rush yesterday as is usual. The applications filed yesterday numbered 223, while 262 came in on the last day one year ago.

OFFICERS OF THE GREYS.

An Old-Time Military Organization Planning to Get Recruits.

The old esprit de corps of the Duquesne Greys is being revived. At an election of officers last night W. L. Adams, well known in local military circles, was elected captain of the organization to succeed Captain Thomas F. Wiley, who retires on account of press of business. Jonas McC. Miles was elected first lieutenant and H. R. Schultz second lieutenant. All the officers formerly were connected with the Greys.

Captain Adams was the first commander of the active corps of the organization and trained the men to a high standard of efficiency. Factional feeling developed, however, and he resigned to make a place for younger men. His leaving caused deep regret and many of the olders members requested his re-election. This was accomplished last night and steps will be taken immediately to recruit the command to a maximum of 100 men.

The organization will appear next summer equipped for camp in a gray khaki uniform. Applicants for places in the ranks will be subjected to a severe examination and only the best men will be accepted.

BIDS OPENED TOMORROW ON BRILLIANT CUT-OFF

Pennsylvania Directors Approve Ordinances and Chief Engineer Ready for Work.

Bids for the construction of the Brilliant cut-off of the Pennsylvania railroad will be submitted to Chief Engineer W. H. Brown tomorrow. Contracts will be awarded as soon after as it is possible to select the best bids, and the work will be rushed. The delay in obtaining the ordinances has put the work farther behind than the railroad had expected, and it proposes to allow no more delays since it is free to go ahead.

At the meeting of the directors of the Pennsylvania railroad yesterday the agreement with the city of Pittsburgh provided in the ordinance was approved and the executive officials were authorized to execute the agreement.

As already told in The Gazette, the line extends from a connection with the main line at Fifth avenue to Brilliant station on the Allegheny Valley, and thence across the Allegheny river to Aspinwall on the West Penn. The length of the new cut-off is two and one-half miles. The cost is notably heavy on account of the high values of the real estate which it was necessary to buy. The purpose is to secure a freight line which will aid in relieving the congestion in and around the city.

Nervous Exhaustion and Sleeplessness

C. DeVos, One of Michigan's Most Prominent Citizens, Tells of the Cure He Received by Use of Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer.

Nervousness is a terrible disease. Sleeplessness and heart trouble are the most prominent systems of danger. When these symptoms become pronounced, fatal collapse, insanity or death may be expected at any moment. When one becomes nervous, irritable, fretful, appetite is poor and cannot sleep it is time to take Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer and not a moment should be lost.

C. DEVOS, Coopersville, Mich.

"I broke down with nervous exhaustion and sleeplessness. Could not sleep until worn out, my appetite failed me and I had to choke down what little I did eat. My attention was directed to Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer and I concluded to try it. It had a wonderful effect on me; in a few nights I was able to get all the sleep needed, my appetite returned and became as ravenous as a wolf's, my weight increased twelve pounds, my mind became clear and active; in fact, I was restored to health, and I look and feel an entirely different man."

Five years later Mr. DeVos wrote as follows: "In reply to yours of the 26th inst., would say that I wrote a testimonial for Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer some five years ago and it had the effect then stated. The cure has been a permanent one, and I am enjoying better health and weigh more than I have for years. I can heartily recommend this remedy for sleeplessness and run-down constitutions." C. DeVos, Coopersville, Mich.

Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer never fails to cure fits, spasms, St. Vitus' dance, paralysis, apoplexy, nervous prostration, loss of vitality, nervous weakness or any nervous disease. It is for sale at one dollar a bottle by all druggists or is sent, express prepaid, on receipt of price. The J. W. Brant Co., Ltd., Albion, Mich., is glad to send free information and medical advice to all who write.

BAD BLOOD

"I had trouble with my bowels which made my blood impure. My face was covered with pimples which no external remedy could remove. I tried your Cascarets and great was my joy when the pimples disappeared after a month's steady use. I have recommended them to all my friends and quite a few have found relief."

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1903.

The people who whipped out Boss Flinn and Boss Stone will attend to Boss Bigelow's case in proper shape next week.

The semi-official announcement that the proposed increase of capital of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will be from $235,000,000, the present capitalization, to $400,000,000, and that the increase will be made from time to time, as circumstances may require, points, undoubtedly, to extensions and betterments that will be of the greatest benefit to Pittsburgh. The lesson of the freight congestion is that Pittsburgh is the most important freight producer on the Pennsylvania lines, and if the lesson has been well learned the expenditures here for improvements and betterments will be on a scale commensurate with the importance.

The report of the Civic league calls attention to the fact that reputable leaders of the Democratic party have repudiated the action of the convention which indorsed Hays. The situation from the decent Democratic point of view was pungently stated by Wesley S. Guffey in his recent letter. He said: "The Democratic voters of Pittsburgh are left to choose between two Republicans. The element that controlled the city convention at Foley's hall in the West End in no sense represented the Democratic party. That convention was dominated by a band of hired ruffians. The better Democrat a man is the more impossible it is for him to indorse the action of that convention."

The paragraph in the report of the Civic league on the way T. S. Bigelow's personal payroll figures in his political management directs attention to a new feature of Pittsburgh politics. Never before have we had an open boodle campaign conducted by a boss with a barrel, buying up politicians, party committees and party organizations, and seeking to carry the election by an army of hired political workers. Some time ago Dr. Evans related his experience while chairman of the county campaign of the Citizens party. Dr. Evans said: "I found from time to time that this man or that man was being paid regularly for his services, just as though he was being employed by a business firm. Monthly salary was paid, these people said by Mr. Bigelow himself. They were men of all sorts and descriptions. I could not tell who was not under pay; even men on the committee of 38 told me they were on his payroll." This was the committee that nominated Hays at Bigelow's dictation.

John C. Haymaker's pigeonholes are open to inspection. Turn on the light. His official record and his office appear to better advantage the more they are illuminated. For eight years he has been district attorney of Allegheny county. Thirty thousand cases have passed through his hands in that time. The records are all available. They are hidden from no one. They stand as a guarantee to the people of the fidelity with which he will serve them as recorder of Pittsburgh. Everything is written down in indelible characters. Nothing is barred from complete and thorough examination. Mr. Haymaker asks no indulgence and his friends ask none for him. He stands or falls on his achievements in office. Turn on the light. Turn it on strong. Turn its fiercest rays into the remotest pigeonhole of the district attorney's office. Let it shine on every page and upon every line of every record. The light turned on the records will show Haymaker as he is as a man and as a servant of the people. In this light the people can quickly tell whether he is the man to be entrusted with the public affairs of Pittsburgh for the next three years. The closest inspection is asked and courted. The people's right to know the sort of man they are asked to vote for is undoubted.

The policy is a wise one, though somewhat belated, that finds expression in the bill reported by the naval committee of the national house of representatives providing not only for a continued increase in the number of our war ships, but for men to officer them. The weakness of the United States navy has been an insufficiency of officers. At the moment there is need for 577 more than appear on the official register. Because of this deficiency the class of 1903 was graduated from the naval academy five months in advance of the regular date. Similarly, during the Spanish-American war, it was necessary to depopulate this school of training and to resort also to civil life for volunteer officers. The experience of the Spanish war ought to have inspired congress to make the necessary provision for more officers, but it remained for the spur of the perils with which the Venezuelan matter was fraught to induce action. The naval committee in justification of the measure it has placed before congress points out that present deficiency of 577 officers, and with the number of officers that will be required for the ships in process of construction, the deficiency in the number of officers at the end of four years will be 1,360 unless additional midshipmen are authorized. This has not been kept concealed up to this time, however. It has been well known to the nation, and it has been known to congressmen. The plan adopted to properly officer the navy is to double the number of appointees to the academy. This will in time work the cure that is so much desired, and, doubtless, the bill will pass without delay.

THE LIGHT TURNED ON BOSS BIGELOW.

We publish in full the report of the Civic league on the character of the candidates now seeking public office.

The Civic league represents no party, seeks no office, has no purpose save to give citizens accurate and impartial information.

The character of its work stands out in its report. It is not eulogistic of anybody. It is critical of all. It picks flaws in both Haymaker and Hays. But this is what it is compelled by regard for truth to say of Haymaker:

"He has performed his whole duty unaffected by politics or politicians."

"Mr. Haymaker is generally regarded in his profession as a conscientious, able and upright lawyer and man. His reputation in private life is excellent."

"His personal associations and habits have not been of a high character."

"His political training and methods, and personal traits, do not inspire confidence in his ability, if elected, to administer the office for the public good."

So much for the candidates personally, but there is much more about the causes they represent. This part of the document every citizen should carefully study.

It tells the tale of the rise of a boss and how he captured the Citizens party organization.

It proves that while the Bigelow machine has stolen the title of the Citizens party it does not represent the Citizens movement.

The Bigelow machine was set up before the Citizens movement was started. It represented the elements of old ring rule chiefly responsible for its extravagance. It sought the re-establishment of ring rule under a new boss. It was with the Citizens movement for a change, but got with it for reform. It broke into the Citizens organization, crowded out its leaders, stole the party title and now seeks to fasten a more corrupt system of boss rule upon the city than Pittsburgh has ever known.

The Civic league says of this Bigelow party:

"The party has gathered about it a horde of the professional politicians of both the old parties, many being retained upon salaries, and large numbers being paid for their political work."

"The indorsement of Mr. Hays by the Democratic organization was secured through an alliance with a number of the old party workers of that body and by the use of means extremely discreditable to those who used them."

The Civic league submits facts without recommendation. The facts show that boss rule is now represented by the Bigelow machine, disguised as the Citizens party. The original principles of the Citizens movement are represented by John C. Haymaker.

WYMAN'S CANDIDACY.

The difficulties which have been found in the way of legal proceedings against James G. Wyman show how impossible it is for the people to rely upon prosecution as a security against official misconduct. The books used during Wyman's last administration as mayor show erasures and alterations in the records of amounts imposed as fines and costs. The books show that crooked work has been done, but that does not of itself prove that Wyman did it or that he pocketed the differences between original entries and the amounts substituted on the record. Hence, it has been found impossible to lodge an information against him.

To fasten responsibility upon any one man in such matters is a difficult task. People who imagine that should Wyman get in again and resume his old practices, he can again be sent to jail, are presuming an amount of careiessness on his part that is not ordinarily to be expected. The Minneapolis graft system that is now celebrated went on for years before criminal responsibility could be brought home to any of the grafters, and then it was due to the fact that they quarreled among themselves and began to incriminate one another.

Heretofore, Wyman's opportunities were limited. He had only the handling of magistrates' fines and had no control over the police department. There was an antagonism between him and the heads of the city departments that brought him a good deal of support as an opponent of city hall management. Should he be elected recorder he will have practical possession of the whole city government, and abuse or negligence of the authority of his office would debauch the entire constitution of municipal affairs. He can quarter upon the public offices, or favor with protection in crime, the band of adherents who follow his political adventures, changing their party connection as suits his interests. He can extract huge profits from the opportunities of his office by mere indifference to public duty. And while it may be generally known that affairs are in a bad way it may be impossible to fix criminal responsibility upon him. The only security for the people is to elect men of integrity and capacity to public office—men who will neither tolerate crooked ways nor crooked bookkeeping. Such a man is Dr. Woodburn, the Republican nominee.

MINISTER BOWEN'S VICTORY.

It is generally held in Washington, and the view is undoubtedly correct, that Minister Bowen, acting for Venezuela, has achieved a notable victory in the determination to have the questions in dispute between the allies and the government of the South American republic submitted to The Hague tribunal. The allies have been opposed to such submission from the first, preferring to have all matters disposed of by direct negotiation and agreement. On the other hand, Minister Bowen has desired that The Hague court of arbitration be given jurisdiction over the questions in dispute, and it is probable that his course that gave so much offense to the British minister and to the British government, was deliberately planned to provoke a breach that would compel an appeal from him to the international tribunal that has been constituted by the nations of the earth to deal with just such cases. It is hardly conceivable that Minister Bowen would have lost his head at a critical stage of the negotiations. His course in Venezuela from the beginning of the blockade until his arrival in Washington indicates a complete self mastery with which a loss of temper at an important juncture does not well harmonize. It is fair to assume, therefore, that he so timed his acts and words as to provoke the British ambassador into taking the course that he desired him and the ambassadors of the allied powers to follow. As diplomats, as well as government officials, in Washington agree that the reference to The Hague is a victory for Bowen, the only construction to be placed on his conduct that Sir Michael Herbert so bitterly resented is that it was carefully thought out and produced exactly the desired result. Wherein the reference agreed on is a victory for Bowen immediately appears in the statement of the press dispatches that "Venezuela thereby is enabled to recover from the effect of the blockade before starting upon the payment of her debts," for "the cumbersome machinery of The Hague, it is expected, will delay matters considerably, and the payment of creditor nations cannot begin until the question of priority payment for the allies is decided."

Now that it is determined finally that the Venezuelan matter shall be submitted to The Hague there ought to be little difficulty with the protocols. There is, of course, room for differences of opinions to appear that may delay submission, but it is to be hoped that agreement will be speedily reached. The present efforts of the representatives of the allied powers are directed to the preparation of the questions to be submitted to arbitration. After they have decided for themselves Mr. Bowen must be satisfied on behalf of Venezuela. Practically everything relating to the claims and the blockade ought to be submitted, and, doubtless, everything will be, as it has been determined that the matter of preferential claims must be. It is quite probable that the allies would have fared better in settling with Bowen than in appealing to The Hague, which probability again emphasizes the reference as a victory for the American statesman. The tribunal, as a peace court, can hardly justify the expectation of British officials, as told in a press cable from London, that the allies will be given "at least some measure of different treatment in the settlement of claims from that accorded to the other nations who did not take aggressive steps to secure their alleged rights." It is rather to be supposed that the Washington view will prevail on the question so vital to South American states that blockades and bombardments do not entitle powers to preferential treatment at the hands of their debtor. Minister Bowen refused to admit this contention as against Venezuela, and if The Hague tribunal sustains him in this view, as Washington opinion expects, it will crown with triumph the victory that he won in forcing reference.

POLITICS AND FAMINE IN FINLAND

An agreeable feature of the distribution of relief to famine sufferers in Finland is the rebuke that has been given to the program of Gen. Bobrikoff, the Russian governor, to manipulate the famine fund in the interest of a political propaganda. Gen. Bobrikoff in his official organ at Helsingfus declared that "justice demanded that in the distribution of the government funds decided preference must be given to the communes whose inhabitants obeyed the military service decree." Notwithstanding this, it is announced from St. Petersburg that Russian contributions through the official St. Petersburg committee, organized by Interior Minister von Plehwe, with Admiral Craemer as chairman, were sent to the Finnish committee instead of to the governor, Gen. Bobrikoff, who is receiving only the funds collected by the St. Petersburg newspaper, the Novoe Vremya. This does not, of course, mean that the Russian program for the Russification of Finland is abandoned, but only that the humanitarianism of the czar's statesmen rises superior to an attempt to take a manifestly unfair advantage of the necessities of the people. To have followed out Bobrikoff's program would have placed the Russian government in a very bad light, and would, undoubtedly, have been fuel to the resentment of patriotic Finns. The merciful cource of Bobrikoff's superiors may reconcile to their political fate thousands whose allegiance could not have been compelled. Viewed in all its aspects, the merciful procedure of the Russian minister of the interior is not only merciful, but statesmanlike, being calculated to allay the animosity against Russia that has been stirred up by the uncompromising course of the Russian governor.

The alliance of the Russian minister of the interior with the work of the committee, instead of with the political propaganda of the governor, ought to have a good effect in establishing better relations between the Finns and the government of their sovereign, and, doubtless, will. The Russification of Finland having been determined on may be regarded as inevitable. The only apparent means of escape from Russification is emigration. It is not to the interest of Russia to depopulate the country, and the disposition to restore and establish tolerable conditions through such a national agency of relief as the Finnish committee may be taken as some guarantee that after the famine is mastered the severities of a Bobrikoff may give way to gentler means of persuasion.

The Third avenue headquarters is referred to by Charles O'Brien as "the lie factory." Make it hatchery, Mr. O'Brien. Factory suggests hard work, and it doesn't cost the Third avenue contingent an effort to produce.

Of course, the disinclination of the allies to take their troubles to The Hague tribunal was born of a settled conviction of the justice of their cause.

Lieut. Gen. Miles is returning from his conquest of Europe and Asia, wearing his honors as modestly as he wears his uniforms.

President Roosevelt would like to know what The Hague tribunal is for, if not to arbitrate international differences.

Departure of four war ships for Honduras to watch the revolution is further proof that Honduras is still on the map.

Bituminous miners and operators have furnished the anthracite coal fields with a shining object lesson.

The Hague tribunal has a great opportunity.

THE PITTSBURGH GAZETTE'S SUNDAY SERMON

GOD'S CARE OF US.

By Rev. Henry Evertson Cobb, D. D., Collegiate Church, Seventy-seventh street and West End avenue, New York.

All these things are against me.—Genesis xlii:36.

We know that to them that love God all things work together for good.—Roman viii:28.

What makes this difference between the gloomy outlook of Jacob and the cheerful confidence of St. Paul? It seemed to the one that all things were at enmity with him; it seemed to the other that all things were his servants and friends.

It is not that Jacob had more than his share of adversity and St. Paul less. Look at the life of St. Paul from a material standpoint, and you see that he had the rougher experience. Sum up the life of Jacob, and you see that the things which seemed against him all had turned to his benefit. St. Paul, on the other hand, ended his life in a Roman dungeon. His life seemed a failure. Yet is is St. Paul who says: "All things have worked together for my good."

It might seem as though the difference of outlook were wholly a matter of mood. There are days when the skies seem to smile upon us and everything goes our way. There are other days when everything seems against us and we are at odds with everybody. Has the world changed its complexion over night? We know rather that the change is due to something within us—that it is we, not things, who are crooked and cross-grained and need regulating. If God's providence is not to our liking, the cure is not to be found in changing the order of things to suit us, but in being ourselves changed into the likeness, i. e., to the liking of God. So St. Paul tells us.

The confident, optimistic outlook which we associate with a cheerful mood may become habitual with us. Think of yourself as within the circle of God's love. Let nothing shake your faith in the fact that God cares for you. The conviction must follow that all things are yours. The Father of men is also the God of things. Nothing is left to chance. Nothing is indifferent or meaningless. If He is for us nothing can be against us. All things must be working together for our good.

When things seem against you, then try to discover the purpose of a loving God in them. The mariner compels the wind, which seemingly would hurl him back upon the shore, to carry him to his haven. In doing this he has but learned how to use the forces which God sent to his help. The thing he supposed his enemy is in reality his friend. Remember how the world's best work has got itself done in the face of adversity, of poverty and discouragement. Men have been thrown back upon their own unsuspected resources. Hardship has set the mind free to discover and invent and plan. A man loses his health; how shall he make that loss serve him? The little work he can do he must do better; he must waste nothing; he will find at the end that the fragments he economized count for more than the whole. A man loses his friends; he may find better friends in good books, in his own home, or among neglected people. They will give a better return for his investment of sympathy. Every setback is a hint that unworked mines of treasure are at our feet if we have the sense to look for them.

This is God's world, and everything in it is a friend to the man who loves God. Everything must help the man who wants to be the kind of man God wants him to be. There is no surer way to make the world against us than to forget its Maker and set our heart on the things that are in it. "Who follows pleasure follows pain." Do the will of God, and all things will be your helpers and your friends. All things shall work together for your good.

And the night shall be filled with music,
And the cares that infest the day
Shall fold their tents like the Arab,
And as silently steal away.

WM. B. HAYS' CANDIDACY SIZED UP BY THE PRESS

Stupidity and Incompetence.

From the Pittsburgh Post, Dec. 29.

It (the nomination of Hays) is a cap-sheaf of political stupidity and incompetence.

Citizens Movement Against Him.

From the Pittsburgh Post, Dec. 29.

We do not believe the election of Mr. Hays at all probable, for the life and earnestness and sense of duty in city government that animated the Citizens movement is against him and cannot be drawn to his support.

Recreant to Principle.

From the Pittsburgh Post, Dec. 31.

He (Hays) has had no real experience in applying the principles of good government; on the contrary, he is standing today and has achieved his nomination by an apparent willingness to abjure the principles on which the Citizens movement was organized in Pittsburgh.

The Creature of a Boss.

From the Pittsburgh Post, Dec. 31.

He (Hays) accepts the boss principle, declares loyalty to the boss, and who can doubt these will be the animating and controlling principles of his administration? There is nothing in Mr. Hays' personality or record to even suggest that he will be a resisting force.

A Headquarters Worker.

From the Pittsburgh Leader, Dec. 24.

The Citizens committee, with foolish precipitation, thrusts to the front as a substitute for the headquarters worker previously named and rejected by public opinion, another headquarters worker whom public opinion is just as prompt to reject.

His Record Won't Do.

From the Pittsburgh Dispatch, Jan. 2.

Candidates should not be considered upon their pledges, but upon their records. Judged in that way, Mr. Hays, as a candidate for recorder upon a platform of reform, becomes utterly ineligible for consideration by the voters who supported the late Citizens party on principle.

A Forced Nomination.

From the Leader, Dec. 24.

We have here an exemplification of the same method of making nominations that was numbered among the sins of the ring—the slating of a candidate and thrusting him down the people's throat without reference to his availability or to the wishes of any element aside from the clique immediately behind him.

The Citizens Party Betrayed.

From the Pittsburgh Leader, Dec. 27.

The Citizens party is made up of thoroughgoing independents, whose sole aim in politics is to obtain the best possible government for our city. In the forced nomination of William B. Hays and the consequent prevention of fusion with the Democrats, the wishes of this element are visibly overruled and its interests are set at naught.

A Surrender to Boss Rule.

From the Pittsburgh Post, Dec. 31.

His (Hays') nomination is a surrender to the vital principle of boss rule against which the Democrats and Citizens came together last February. It will nullify with vast patronage in his unskilled hands, to be directed by others, all of the important results achieved in the election of a reform council and reform controller. It is a surrender to those ideas and principles of municipal administration against which the people have been in arms a long time.

CURRENT COMMENT.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S DEMOCRACY.

President Roosevelt does not carry his ideas of Democratic equality quite so far as Thomas Jefferson did. He respects all the conventions of official society in public, but in his private and personal relations he is a pretty thoroughgoing Democrat. He often goes to shake the grimy hand of an engine driver who has carried him safely on a railway journey. He is "hail fellow well met" with his old friends among the cowboys and the rough riders. And just now he has in Washington as his guest his old Maine woods guide, with his wife and some friends, who have all taken luncheon with the president and Mrs. Roosevelt in the White House.

It is safe to say that none of our mushroom aristocracy, and very few even of the older growth, would be thus friendly and familiar with their "plain" friends though a good type of the independent native guides of the Adirondacks or the Maine woods is at heart as thorough a gentleman, in the real meaning of that word, and is certainly much better company than one-half of the vapid men folk who help to make up what is called "society." Yet Mr. Roosevelt could boast, if he were weak enough, of the old "Knickerbocker blood," and though not rich, in the modern meaning of this word, he has always lived in an atmosphere of wealth, refinement and culture.

That he still believes, in respect to sterling worth unadorned with either wealth or booklearning or social graces, that "a man's a man for a' that," and that, though occupying the highest station in the land, he has the courage of his liking and the fortitude of his friendship, is a trait of his character which explains something of that popularity which the politicians do not understand and which even his mistakes do not seriously impair. A very few Americans may "dearly love a lord." The great mass of them love and admire a true Democrat like Lincoln, Grant, McKinley and Roosevelt.—New York World.

THE NOBLER HEROISM.

Mr. Carnegie is being criticised for saying in a speech the other day when presenting a trophy to a boy that in the past the name of a hero was to be won only by wholesale slaughter. It is difficult to find fault with this. The speaker was generalizing. For many centuries those who did the most slaughtering were the greatest men. Until Gibbon wrote, history was little more than a compilation of the victories of military chieftains. Gibbon struck below the surface and endeavored to depict something else, but it will scarcely be claimed that he unearthed much savoring of heroism—that is, of the kind which Mr. Carnegie referred to in his speech.

While the heroism which consists in self-sacrifice and aid to humanity has existed probably ever since man emerged from barbarism, it did not become generally recognized as a meritorious virtue until the nineteenth century. The unknown benefactors of mankind have existed in numbers in every generation, and they were unquestionably heroes—but heroes without recognition, because the general principle that such acts were worthy of note did not prevail. Nor is the worship of those who slaughter at an end by any means. The more benevolent style of heroism has obtained a footing, but it is not yet able to contest the palm with its rival. Were war to break out tomorrow and a general to be successful in a great battle the public would very promptly perceive what sort of heroism was the favorite in the popular mind.

The philanthropists, before they can persuade the great majority to accept their standard, must induce the world to abolish killing as a means of settling international disputes. There is not a single honest reason why nations, more than individuals, should slaughter and destroy for the purpose of settling disputes. As long as they do pursue this unworthy method so long will the barbarous instinct instigate the public to applaud those who win, just as they applaud a prize fighter who knocks his man out. There is, nevertheless, a most gratifying increase in the appreciation of the nobler kinds of heroism. Acts of benevolence and the relief of humanity, whether on a large or small scale, are far more numerous than ever before in the history of the race, and they are being constantly multiplied. This of itself will eventually create an irresistible force that will put an end to war.—Baltimore American.

PASSING OF PROHIBITION.

The people of Vermont have fully as much political capacity as the people of any community in the world, probably. Like the people of Switzerland, they manage their own affairs down to the ground, and get exactly what they want in the way of representatives and legislation. Possibly, they may not want the highest and best thing always; but what they want they get.

That they have now deliberately given up prohibition by a decisive popular vote, after a thorough and sincere trial of more than 50 years, is, therefore, a pretty good indication that it will not work anywhere, for in no state could the conditions favor its success more than they do in Vermont.

The Vermonters adopted prohibition in the first place as a reaction from a very general abuse of alcohol. Up to 1850 liquor ran like water in their mountain state. Every country store kept a pail of New England rum standing on its counter, free to all comers, as an attraction to customers. Men died of alcoholism in every town. The temperance wave started by John B. Gough and others swept the state into an attempt to suppress the sale of liquor altogether.

The attempt was made, as we have said, with the fullest sincerity. Every loophole for the liquor sellers was stopped by stringent legislation as soon as it was found. It was made a crime to give a glass of liquor away. No stone was left unturned to suppress the sale. No session of the legislature passed without repressive liquor legislation.

The Vermonters, after all this, were confronted with the fact that their prohibition law was a great humbug. Where local sentiment favored or winked at the sale of liquor, it was sold quite freely. Where sentiment utterly reprobated its sale, it could be procured only with great difficulty. That is all that Vermont's 50 years of stringent liquor legislation had accomplished. As an honest people they have made up their minds to recognize this state of things. They sanctioned local option.

No more liquor will be made or sold in Vermont under local option than under prohibition. There will be no return to the old free rum system. Vermont has made up her mind to be temperate—in legislation as well as in personal habits.—New York Mail and Express.

THE DEATH ROLL.

Funeral of Ex-Senator Dawes.

PITTSFIELD, MASS., Feb. 7.—The funeral of former Senator Henry L. Dawes was held at the First Congregational church today. The commonwealth, the city of Pittsfield, the county bar and various societies were represented and all places of business were closed during the services.

PERSONALS

L. G. Haas, assistant general manager of the Baltimore & Ohio, arrived in the city last night and is stopping at the Henry. Mr. Haas was formerly superintendent of the Pittsburgh division of the Baltimore & Ohio and was promoted to his present position last December. Yesterday was his first visit to the city since his promotion. Mr. Haas stated that he was on a tour of the division headquarters of the system and would go from Pittsburgh to New Castle, Wheeling and other points and as far west as Chicago. He was much interested in learning that the Wabash had gotten into Pittsburgh and in the fact that the government had started the raising of the Allegheny river bridges. He said that the raising of the bridges would be a serious handicap on railroads crossing the rivers and would interfere greatly with getting better transportation facilities for the city.

Attorney W. A. Griffith, a member of the Westmoreland county bar, has withdrawn from the legal firm of Williams, Sloan & Griffith of Greensburg and will engage in the practice of law in Pittsburgh. He was an attorney in Westmoreland county for 17 years and is a brother of Capt. T. W. Griffith, in charge of the United States army recruiting office in Pittsburgh.

A party of prominent Pittsburghers, who have been in Mexico for a month inspecting mining properties in the vicinity of Monteray, returned home yesterday. In the party were Capt. S. S. Brown, Harry W. Brown, W. S. Brown, W. I. Mustin, D. L. Gillespie, D. C. Ripley and W. S. Warren of St. Louis.

The Rev. A. Mann, who has charge of the deaf mute missions of the country for the Protestant Episcopal church, arrived in the city yesterday to hold services for deaf mutes this morning in the Trinity church. He is stopping at the Seventh Avenue hotel. This evening he will go to Greensburg and from there to Wellsburg and Wheeling, where he will conduct services Monday. The Rev. Mr. Mann is a deaf mute himself but his children can hear and speak. He has a son who is city editor of a paper in Cleveland, O.

Former Judge Josiah Cohen went to Cincinnati, O., last night on business.

CAPTAIN KETTLE WAS A REAL MAN

Cutliffe Hyne Tells How He Met the Hero of His Thirty-Eight Tales.

PROBABLY it has struck everybody who has followed the adventures of Captain Kettle that the truculent and many-sided little skipper who enjoys a renown almost equal to that of Sherlock Holmes, could have been no mere creature of the imagination, but must have had an original in real life. And Cutliffe Hyne, the author of "Kettle," has just confessed where he got him—not all of him in one person, however. It was several years ago, when the writer, who is as confirmed a traveler as his intimate descriptions of strange lands would indicate, was returning from New Orleans to Plymouth on a tramp steamer. The ship carried no passengers, and in order to gratify his desire to return home aboard of her, Hyne had to sign articles before the consul as "mate," and it was his voluntary performance of some of the duties ordinarily connected with that office that brought the story writer into contact with the man whom he was destined to introduce to thousands of readers under the name of Captain Kettle.

"Kettle" was not the name of the captain of the "tramp," but in nearly every other respect the skipper was the counterpart of the little fire-eater in the stories. He was as full of fight, as foul of mouth, as handy with his pistol—as Hyne had reason to remember, for when the captain's temper got the better of him the acting "mate" stood an excellent chance of being shot like any other of the crew. The real "Kettle," however, neither played the accordion nor wrote verses. These were the accomplishments of the fourth mate and the engineer, respectively, but Hyne thought himself justified in making his hero a "composite" character.

Out of the voyage which he made under the captain's command, Hyne must have got material for a round dozen "Kettle" stories. He says that when the crew mutinied one day and demanded that the ship return to port on the ground that their meat wasn't fit to eat, the captain drew his six-shooter, and with a stream of imprecations ordered the men below, vowing that he "believed if he gave them the liver-wing of a baked angel they would find fault with the stuffing."

Despite the popularity of "Kettle" and Cutliffe Hyne's other characters, little is known of the author's personality. He lives in a cozy little house near Bradford, in Yorkshire, England. His study overlooks a trim garden. Hyne, who is tall, clean shaven and muscular, has been all over the world and keeps going, for it is a part of his creed that the modern writer of fiction must know intimately the lands in which his stories take place, the world having, in his opinion, taken to traveling to too great an extent to make a novel written with the aid of a guide book pass muster. The writer's latest wanderings have been in Southern Morocco, and it is significant to note that in Southern Morocco, too, take place the latest adventures of Captain Kettle—which, by the way, are to be the last. Hyne's tales of the little skipper now number 38.

At present the only "Victor Hugo" museum is his home on the island of Guernsey, where, standing, as was his habit, and looking out at the waves, he wrote "The Toilers of the Sea." Now a second shrine for Hugo lovers is to be established in Paris. The quaint old Louis Treize house in the Place des Vosges, where Hugo lived when "Hernani" brought him fame, has been purchased, and within it will be placed as many relics of the author of "Les Miserables" as can be discovered.

The Funk & Wagnalls Company issue this month "The Extra-Canonical Life of Christ," by Bernhard Pick, Ph. D., D. D., a former Pittsburgh pastor. This work is a monograph, written in popular as well as scholarly style, containing every story concerning Christ, and every saying attributed to him, which is found in ancient uninspired writings and which cannot be traced to a New Testament source.

The initial number of the Journal of Comparative Literature, a new quarterly to be edited by Prof. George E. Woodberry and published by McClure, Phillips & Co., looks even more polyglot than the late lamented Cosmopolis. The first number has contributions in English, Latin, French and Italian, all contributions being printed in the language in which they were written.

The leading article in this number is by Prof. Ch. Bastide, tracing the influence of the Huguenots who emigrated to England before and after the edict of Nantes. Then follow the hitherto unpublished letters of an English humanist—John Free, who went to Italy about the middle of the fifteenth century, and gives a delightful picture of the social and academic life of Italy in those days, with accounts of the accession of Pius II. to the Papacy, and of his own hardships in obtaining education, having to pawn his clothes to buy books, etc.

Of the other articles, that on "Moliere in Italy," by Prof. Toldo, of Turin, a note on an obscure passage in Chaucer, and a review of a new Cervantes book are notable. The Journal certainly starts out well—its typographical appearance and its contents alike will delight the scholar.

Prof. Woodberry's editorial assistants are Prof. J. B. Fletcher, of Harvard, and Dr. J. E. Spingarn, of Columbia. Among the scholars who have promised to contribute is J. J. Jusserand, the new French ambassador.

Most people have heard of invisible ink and also of a preparation which, after a time, fades off the paper on which it was written. A French journal announces yet another new development of this nature. This is nothing less than a disappearing paper. The paper intended for this use is first steeped in sulphuric acid, diluted according to the lease of life it is intended the material should possess, and is afterwards dried and glazed and the acid superficially sterilized by means of ammoniac vapor. But the acid still remains in the pores, and that paper is infallibly doomed after an existence more or less prolonged, as the case may be. It is certainly a most useful invention, and should commend itself strongly to the publishers of modern novels.

There will be no more books by the Bowen-Merrill Co. Its name has been changed to the Bobbs-Merrill Co., substituting the name of the president of the company for that of the late Silas T. Bowen, whose estate has had no interest in the business for a number of years.

Three new novels are promised by the Macmillan Co. for the spring, to which a large number of readers will look forward. The authors are James Lane Allen, Winston Churchill and Charles Major.

Clever Bull Terrier Used by a Bank as a Mascot Has Been Immortalized In Stone

GRIM FACE OF A DOG OVER PORTAL

Prominent Position Given to the Mascot of the Farmers National Bank.

PRINCE WENT TO WAR

Such at Least Is the Tradition That Attaches to a Popular Canine—Striking Symbol of Security.

Two workingmen stood at the corner of Fifth avenue and Wood street, admiring the marble entrance to the new Farmers' bank building. In the keystone of the arch, over the lofty portal, they caught sight of the head of the stern-faced bull terrier whose surly features are chiseled in the stone.

"That's a fine piece of work," said one of the men, with a nod of approval.

"Yes; and the beast they carved from was certainly a fine dog," rejoined the other.

The two men then turned their conversation to other topics, perhaps not knowing the interesting story behind that piece of sculpture. The bull terrier's likeness, as every Pittsburgh fancier knows, is the trademark of the Farmers' Deposit National bank, and for years its mascot and watchdog has been an all-white specimen of that plucky canine breed.

President T. Hart Given originated the idea. He is especially fond of the bull terrier breed, and away back in the 90s he secured a puppy named "Prince" to officiate as mascot and watchdog. "Prince" was spotlessly white and soon became a prominent figure around the bank in Fourth avenue. He had a large acquaintance among the business men. When depositors came in he would greet them with a cordial yelp, and if they were disposed to be friendly he would caress them by brushing his sleek sides about their shins—the true canine etiquette for showing obeisance.

"Banking hours" had no special attraction for "Prince." He lived in the bank and frequently could be seen nosing around the big counting room at all hours of the night. If burglars ever had any designs on the bank's money, the presence of the terrier kept them at a distance, and never a cent was lost.

"Prince" was immortalized in art. The bank's stationery, its circulars, deposit slips and stock certificates bore an engraving of the plucky dog. Although he was not a member of the board of directors, he invariably attended their meetings, and on "discount day" he was wont to sit in the corner and deliberate on every piece of paper that was passed upon.

The Spanish war broke out, and "Prince" became restless. On the night after the Tenth regiment passed through Pittsburgh on its way to the Philippines the famous dog disappeared. To this day no one knows what fate came to him.

Every member of the bank was grieved over "Prince's" disappearance, but the pictures of the mascot were kept on the stationery, and when the new building was planned one of the first specifications given the architect was that "Prince's" head should be carved over the door. John Evans, a famous Boston sculptor, was engaged on the work for weeks, and it was modeled from the familiar picture used on the stock certificates.

"Prince's" vacancy has been filled by another terrier named "Farmer." He resembles "Prince" and has learned many of his predecessor's tricks. He is quite popular, too, and has the entre to all the meetings of the board.

THE CIGARETTE MORE POPULAR

Prejudice Has Been Overcome and Imported Brands Have the Call.

STOGIES STILL IN LEAD

Average Pittsburgher Prefers Stogies to All Other Kinds of Smokes, but the Cigarette Patrons Are Increasing.

The cigarette, once looked upon as an instrument of vice, is fast becoming popular in Pittsburgh. The prejudice against it is dying out, and the day may come when it will share the local popularity of the stogie.

This news will be a blow to the workers of the Anti-Cigarette league and kindred organizations, but it is true, nevertheless, and the figures which can be obtained from any big tobacconist are convincing. Where one small 5-cent package of a familiar brand of cigarettes was sold in this city five years ago, there are now calls for 20 times that quantity at prices ranging from 10 cents to 40 cents a package.

"Cigarettes have the call as the most popular smoke," said a dealer yesterday, "and the choice runs to the Turkish and Egyptian brands. My customers consume from 5,000 to 10,000 cigarettes a week. And do you know what creates this demand? The answer is simple—advertising.

Advertising Makes Sales.

"In placing anything upon the market now, whether it is groceries, a new medicine or tobacco, advertising does the work provided other things are equal. The most popular cigarettes are those that retail at 10 cents a package, and in noting that these are the biggest factors in the business it is curious to observe that these are the brands that are given the widest range of publicity.

"Cigarettes are almost all of domestic manufacture. They are made around New York from imported tobacco, the foreign brands being labeled with flaming boxes. The domestic kind are made in the south, where we get the tobacco that comes for the home-made rolled cigarettes. Cheap brands are not so popular as they were five years ago. Many of the smokers who now are advocates of the imported cigarettes learned the habit with the 5-cent variety.

"There are many tricks in smoking. The 25-cent sort become tasteless sometimes and the smoker will roll his own or turn to freaks—Mexicans, 5-centers and obscure makes—in order to prepare his tongue to be edified by his old stand-by."

Other Trade Not Injured.

"Has the increase in the demand for cigarettes injured the other trade?" was asked. "No; it is not apparent," was the reply. "It may be felt in time, but up to the present season it has not been noticed. The stogie will never be affected by the popularity of the cigarette. Did you ever notice that the man who lives on stogies prefers his favorites to the best cigar?

"Economy is not the principal reason for his smoking the stogie. He likes it, and when a Pittsburgher goes to another city or to Europe the first thing he will pack away is a box or a case of boxes of his favorite smokes.

"Since the Spanish war, when the war tax raised the price of stogies to three for 5 cents, whereas formerly four had been given for a nickel, the 'four-for' brands have little call. Smokers now want 'three-fors' and 'two-fors,' many preferring them to a cheap cigar. The Wheelings, of course, have their own particular devotees. The latter inherited the taste from their grandfathers, and I suppose their own grandchildren will find repose in the same strong-smelling smoke. Wheelings, by the way, are made from Kentucky tobacco, but if you should go to that state and offer a Wheeling stogie to a colonel he would draw a gun on you. He can drink pints of Bourbon without water, but two puffs from a strong stogie would lay him out.

Most Popular Cigars.

"The most popular cigars are those sold at 'two for a quarter.' Remember, I am speaking for Pittsburgh. Other communities might favor another kind, but the Pittsburgher goes in for a first-class smoke when he does turn his thoughts from the stogie. The great amount of advertising done for the 5-cent brands have brought them a great sale, and some of the 10-centers are doing well."

"Does the average Pittsburgher smoke many at 50 cents straight? Not when he's sober.

"Tobacco is not suffered to remain long in storage. Sub-jobbers—Pittsburgh is full of these dealers—buy up much of the old stock and that which is placed on the sliding board, and it is rushed off in that way. Unless cigars are placed in a damp place they will soon become brittle. The tobacco market is good enough to keep goods moving constantly, and comparatively little is stored for more than six months, even by the largest dealers.

"There is less chewing than formerly. By this statement I mean that there are more men who use chewing tobacco today than there were 20 years ago, but the increase is not to be compared to the increase of population. Chewing is confined mostly to laboring men. Pipe-smoking is showing a slight increase.

"It's interesting to judge what man will buy when he steps in the door. Here comes a young fellow with clothes of fashionable cut and a fancy vest. I know before he asks that he will take imported cigarettes. This portly man with the 'mutton chop' whiskers—he may take a 25-cent—no, he wants a dime's worth of stogies. This thin-faced man who evidently is a stranger in the city—now watch him take some good cigars. Didn't I tell you? You can pick 'em out every time.

"This young blood with the blue school cap. He's in the pipe stage—just as I thought he wanted a 5-cent tin of cut plug for his French briar. He will graduate some day, and will turn to something else. Only schoolboys, artists, reporters and grandpapas have much use for a pipe. Oh, I beg pardon. My hat's always off to the Germans, you know."

RAPID PROGRESS ON THEATER PLANS

Architect's Work Well Under Way and S. F. Nixon Prepares for Trip Abroad.

Samuel F. Nixon spent all of yesterday in completing the details with the architect for Nixon & Zimmerman's new Sixth avenue theater. The work has now taken definite shape, and every effort is being made to have the contract under way within the next 60 days.

"As soon as I have set my architects straight I shall pass this matter over to my son," said Mr. Nixon, "and then you'll see me go down to New York and board the first steamer for Europe. I greatly need rest. Mr. Zimmerman, my partner, is at Palm Beach, where he is resting preparatory to an operation which he will be obliged to undergo for a compound cataract on his eyes. We expect him to recover before the opening of our new playhouse.

"Yes, we have decided to call the new theater 'The Nixon.' There is a long story connected with this. I have been in the business a quarter of a century, and for years have told myself that if I should realize my dreams for building a perfect theater I should name it in my own honor. Now that time has come, and no theater in this country shall compare with the convenience and the magnificence of the one which soon will crown the site in Sixth avenue. The new house in Baltimore will be named the Zimmerman.

"Of our business ventures in Baltimore, Chicago and elsewhere, we look for no better returns than from this city. Mr. Marshall, the architect, will move here shortly, and will remain on the ground, directing every detail of the work. I am sanguine that it will be ready before the end of October. My son and Thomas F. Kirk, Jr., will have direct charge of affairs here. Mr. Zimmerman's three sons, Fred, Charles and Frank, are interested in theatricals in the east, and assist in the management of our theaters there."

TWELVE YEARS FRAUD.

John Page Impersonates Father Draws Pension and Lives at Soldiers Home—Now Arrested.

NEW HAVEN, CONN., Feb. 7.—John Page, an inmate of the Soldiers' Home at Norton, was held today for the United States district court on the charge of fraudulently obtaining a pension. It is alleged that Page, who is now 65 years old, impersonated his father, who was a veteran of the civil war.

For 12 years Page has drawn a pension and has lived at the Soldiers' Home part of that time. It is said he has received more than $2,000 in pension money.

His attempt to obtain an increase led to an investigation, and his arrest followed.

SAFE-CRACKERS DID A NEAT JOB

THIRD IN TEN DAYS

The third safe-cracking in this city inside of 10 days, supposed by the detectives to have been done by the same people who are still uncaught and who are high-class professionals, took place yesterday. This time they secured $100 for their efforts. The safe in the station of the Pittsburgh, Virginia & Charleston railroad in Twelfth street, South Side, was blown open yesterday morning about 2 o'clock. After destroying and robbing the safe, they escaped. Nothing was left behind that will lead to their detection. The detectives made an investigation, but were unable to tell anything about the affair.

The burglars got in by jimmying open the front door, after they had failed to break in the rear door. Once inside the office, they climbed over the counter and went to work at the safe. The knob was knocked off with a coupling pin and glycerin was injected into the tumblers. A fuse and cap were adjusted and the inside of the iron box was shattered. The safe door was sprung open, but was not much damaged by the explosive.

Part of the office furniture was destroyed. The ticket case, which was sitting by the side of the safe, was shattered. The safe crackers took about $100 and left the place.

The station is in a section of the city that is not much frequented after nightfall. The robbery was discovered at 7 o'clock yesterday morning. Word was sent to the police and Detectives James Eagan, Albert H. Swinehart and George Cole made an investigation. They think the men who cracked the safe in Greenough street early Friday morning and the men who attempted to rob the Knoxville Land Improvement Company safes on February 3 are the same men who did yesterday's work.

JURISDICTION IS DISPUTED.

Mercantile Trust Company Files Answer to Suit in Reservoir Case Before U. S. Court.

The Mercantile Trust Company yesterday filed its answer in the equity suit brought by M. A. McSwiggen of East Liverpool, O., in the United States circuit court to restrain Controller Larkin from paying the trust company $102,000, one of the estimates which the trust company claims is due for the construction of Highland reservoir No. 2.

The answer of the trust company alleges that the bill brought by M. A. McSwiggen, at the instance of Controller Larkin, is defective because not sworn to as required by the rules of the court; that sufficient damages to the plaintiff have not been shown as required by an act in congress to bring the case within the jurisdiction of the United States courts, and that the state courts of Allegheny county have acquired, prior to the bringing of this suit, jurisdiction of the controversy over the Highland reservoir. The defendant trust company gives as another reason for assuming that the case is outside of the jurisdiction of the United States court that the terms of the contract between the city and the contractors who built the reservoir provide that the director of the public works of the city is made the sole arbiter in disputes arising concerning the performance of the contract.

The answer contends that there is yet due and owing an estimate for the months of October and November in the sum of $102,252 24; that there is yet due and owing on the final estimate yet to be issued for the payment of said reservoir $84,952 50, less the sum of $28,317 50, being 5 per cent of the contract which is to be retained by the city for one year to keep the reservoir in good condition.

It is further averred that the reservoir is so substantially built that this sum is amply sufficient to protect the city. The prayer concludes that no injunction shall be granted as prayed for in the bill and that the bill be dismissed and that the trust company be allowed to leave court with its proper costs.

Attorney J. C. Gray appeared for Director McCandless, and asked that the director be granted until the first Monday of March to prepare his answer to McSwiggen's bill. Director McCandless states he has not been able, owing to the inclemency of the weather, to complete the examination of the reservoir.

Judge Acheson gave the director until February 23 to make his answer.

Attorney W. E. Rodgers appeared in common pleas court yesterday and asked that Controller Larkin be granted an extension of 15 days to amend his return to the mandamus proceedings brought against the controller by the Mercantile Trust Company to compel him to pay the remaining estimates on the Highland reservoir. Attorney Rodgers stated that Attorney George W. Guthrie, one of Larkin's counsel, is in Florida, and will not be home for a few days. Mr. Rodgers said that he would like to consult Mr. Guthrie before filing the amended return.

THE LUNCH QUESTION.

How a Big Chicago Firm Solved It.

So many employes "belt the lunch" and eat what they should not, that they soon show the effect in nervousness and dyspepsia. This has attracted the attention of managers of the big stores and shops. In one Chicago firm an experiment on some of the girls resulted in a complete solution of the question.

The woman that made the experiment tells the tale as follows: "About a year ago I became alarmed at the state of my daughter's health. She was employed by a big firm here and for some reason steadily lost flesh, grew very nervous, had no appetite and could not sleep.

"Questioning her, I found she ate but little lunch, for at that busy hour she was seldom served promptly and the time being short she just 'bolted' the food and rushed back. She ate very light breakfasts, and I could see she suffered from lack of nourishment. I felt responsible for this, and finally got her some Grape-Nuts for breakfast.

"I also got a neat leather case holding two pint flasks. One I filled with milk, the other with cold Postum Coffee which had been properly made. She also carried a package of Grape-Nuts. The Postum she drank iced with a dash of lemon. She followed the Grape-Nuts with some fruit, and this made up her lunch.

"In spite of the warm weather she improved greatly in two weeks' time. She gained in flesh, her nerves were steady and she slept sweetly at night. She never felt the old weakness from hunger.

"In a short time a few other girls in the office tried it, and the effect was so marked upon all that still others were persuaded. Finally a room was cleared out and the one hundred and odd girls were served daily with Grape-Nuts and hot Postum. It was a revolution, but the manager saw the good result and adopted the plan, greatly to the benefit of the health of the employes and at a saving in expense." RUPTURE CURED In 30 to 60 Days.

OF MEN, WOMEN and CHILDREN

The FREE ADVICE AND FREE EXAMINATION I offer to rupture sufferers everywhere is an opportunity too valuable to be overlooked or resisted by any man, woman or child having this distressing affliction. The value of a free consultation with me cannot be overestimated. It cannot other than lead you to see the only way it is possible to cure a rupture without the use of a surgeon's knife or the cutting operation, which, besides being dangerous, is always painful and not infrequently a failure.

If you haven't already discovered how impossible it is for a truss to cure a rupture I would advise that you talk to patients whom I have cured after they had worn all sorts of trusses and got not even the slightest relief.

Nov. 15, 1902.

"I suffered for 12 years with a rupture as large as a cocoanut. I tried trusses time and again, but they did me no good. Finally I took Dr. Geo. B. Wix's Electro Chemic treatment and am now cured, as sound as I ever was. I would recommend all ruptured sufferers to go to Dr. Wix for I know he can do exactly what he claims. I especially urge my fellow countrymen from France to take this treatment.

A CURE GUARANTEED

My record of thousands of cures of Piles, Fistula and other rectal diseases is unchallengeable evidence of the marvelous power of my treatment. I guarantee to permanently cure you. My treatment is soothing and painless, will not cause any distressing after effects, and entirely eliminates all possibility of a recurrence of the trouble.

PERMANENTLY CURED OF PILES.

"After suffering more than ten (10) years with Piles, during which time I was unable to get benefit from salves or ointments, I tried Dr. Geo. B. Wix's Electro Chemic treatment, and was cured in one month. I am now as sound as anyone. Every sufferer from Piles should see Dr. Wix, for I know he can give a permanent, painless cure."

MUSIC BUT NOT ORATORS WANTED

CANDIDATE NOT THERE

Ex-Mayor Fulton Tells Disappointed Audience That Standard Bearer Is Ill—Characteristic Attacks on Religious Hymns.

The Citizens quartet is making the hit of the present recordership campaign. At a meeting held last night in Wickersham school, South Thirtieth and Carson streets, Twenty-fourth ward, in the interest of William B. Hays' candidacy, the four colored men were much more in demand than the corps of orators there to espouse the cause of the candidate. Round after round of applause greeted the musical efforts, and more than once during the meeting it looked as though disorder would break loose because the quartet was not permitted to sing all the time.

Alderman John Caldwell, the chairman, told the audience that it must be satisfied with one song and one encore, because there were speakers present who had to talk and had to be heard. He introduced William B. Rogers, the first speaker, as "a man who has devoted many years trying to reform the people of Pittsburgh."

Mr. Rogers corrected the chairman, and said that he was working in the interest of better government for the city, and then launched forth on the star speech of the evening. His manner was simple, eloquent and impressive. He told the people what they were fighting for, and said that the object of the Citizens party was to get control of the city of Pittsburgh. He took a fall out of the theatrical orators, who, he said, deliver but a general talk. He said that he would confine himself to facts.

Ex-Mayor "Andy" Fulton, the next speaker, announced that Candidate Hays would not be present. The candidate's absence had already been noticed and commented upon. Fulton said Mr. Hays had the rheumatism and would not venture out of doors.

The character and honesty of the Republican candidate was admitted by Ralph Strawbridge. He said that Haymaker was all right, but that he did not like the company the district attorney keeps. In accordance with the policy of the Citizens party, he referred lightly to the religious hymns. "Onward, Christian Soldier" and "Nearer, My God, to Thee." He requested the audience to stay at home Sunday and read the pamphlet about the city organization that would be given to them as they passed out.

The speech of William J. Brennen was opened by referring to Republican leaders as "Christian singing soldiers." He said that they were stealing the livery of heaven to serve the devil. He formally challenged John C. Haymaker to say something against William B. Hays if the spoke of alleged campaign promises made by the Republican councilmen of the Twenty-fourth ward in reference to placing additional lights in the streets. He promised them, if Hays was elected, to put up two lights for every one promised by the Republicans. "In Bremner's own words, 'campaign promises are cheap.'"

William J. Moore made his characteristic speech, in which he again made light of religion and hymns. He said that the Citizens party was as far above the Republican party as "the battlements of heaven are above the mudsills of hell." He said that the Republicans were now singing "Onward, Christian Soldiers," but after election would sing that well-known hymn "We Will Gather at the River." He also pictured William Flinn singing "Abide With Me" to Max Leslie.

The Polish Citizens held a meeting at Schiller-Glocke hall, Twenty-sixth and Penn streets, South Side, at which Hays' candidacy was championed in a foreign tongue. Joseph Mulcoski presided and the Polish orators were Joseph Michalski, Zygmunt Chrzanowski, John H. Vlchesian, Joseph Sierakowski, Frank Banicki, Charles Zulinski and Stanislaus Blazak. Andrew Fulton and Councilman Costello made speeches in English.

A Citizens meeting was held in Manchester hall, Thirty-fifth ward, last night. Speeches were made by D. J. Bole, Fred Jolley, Thomas M. Brown and Albert G. Galvin.

ARRANGING FOR TEMPERANCE RALLY

Father Beane Names Committees Which Will Have Charge of Meeting Sunday Night.

The big total abstinence rally to be held next Sunday evening in the Republican auditorium, Sixth avenue and Cherry alley, promises to be one of the largest and most important gatherings of temperance workers which has taken place in Pittsburgh for several years. The Rev. Father John G. Beane, president of the local total abstinence union, who will preside at the meeting next Sunday, has invited all the pastors and their congregations in this vicinity to attend the meeting.

The committees which will have charge of the arrangements for the meeting as announced by Father Beane are as follows:

Charles L. McShane, Father Lansing society; John J. Major, Epiphany; Joseph A. Weldon, Sacred Heart; Daniel Brown, Braddock; James Fitzmorris, Irwin; James O'Brien, Perry; James D. Kennedy, Greensburg; William Sullivan, Holy Cross, South Side; F. W. Jones, Mt. Washington; Wm. McLaughlin, St. Brigids; James McDermott, Holy Rosary; P. D. Thornton, Sharpsburg; John Flinn, St. Paul's; J. J. Sweeney, Lawrenceville; Robert Sheehan, St. Patrick's; Miss Nellie Corcoran, St. Mary's, Forty-sixth street; Miss Mary Byrne, All Saints; Mrs. John M. Tighe, Duquesne Heights.

The Rev. Father John Price, of the West End, will be the speaker of the evening. The music will be under the direction of Thomas F. Kirk, Sr., one of Pittsburgh's best-known musical directors. The program will include solos by Miss Carrie Neumont and Miss McAlister of St. Paul's, and Harry E. Reib and several numbers by St. Bridget's Choral club.

PARASOLS ARE FAD.

Everyone in Palm Beach Trying to Own Prettiest—Bridge Party One of Day's Events.

PALM BEACH, FLA., Feb. 7.—(Special.)—This has been a gala day here, for the weather has been absolutely perfect. There have been a number of prominent arrivals, among them the Countess Boni de Castellane and party, who have returned from a trip to Nassau. They will probably remain some time. Mr. and Mrs. Orson Hoyt are with the countess.

Mr. and Mrs. C. H. P. Belmont attended the shoot at the Gun club this afternoon. Mrs. R. Dan Douglass gave a bridge party at the Breakers, in a private drawing room for Mrs. R. C. Watson.

Parasols are the fad here now and each one vies with the other in trying to own the prettiest.

Mr. and Mrs. Clayton G. Dixon, who have been on a fishing trip to the Everglades on a house boat, arrived this morning and will remain a month.

VICTORY WON BY JACKSONIANS

Nomination Papers Filed by That Party Held to Be Valid and Proper.

HAYMAKER ON TICKET

A Few Ward Officers Knocked Out by Reason of Irregularities Citizens Ticket Stands in Thirty-Second Ward.

The Jacksonian party's candidate for recorder, John C. Haymaker, and its various candidates for councilmen and school directors, will go on the official ballot by a decision of Judges Collier, Brown and Macfarlane in court of common pleas No. 1 yesterday. The objections filed by the Citizens party and the Bigelow Democracy were knocked out with the exception of a few minor ward officers which are of little importance and do not affect the general papers of the new Democracy. The decision is a victory for the Jacksonian party and shows that the 1,100 signers to its papers are genuine and valid.

The objections considered by the court were only against the papers filed in the various wards, and four of these placed the name of Haymaker as the candidate for recorder at the head and in these the court strikes off the candidates for the election boards. No objections had been considered against the paper upon which Haymaker is named as the candidate for recorder, which is separate from the others, and this ticket will lead the tickets found valid by the court.

These Were Irregular.

As to the tickets taken under consideration and not the Haymaker ticket, the court says it is conceded that the nomination for recorder in the four wards specified was irregular and that the question before the court was whether the nomination for ward and precinct officers are regular and if so, whether they fall by reason of an irregular nomination being contained on the same paper. The nomination for ward officers, such as councilmen and school directors, being signed by the requisite number of qualified electors of the ward, is in due form.

The court says that the election board are officers for a separate election district, and that there is nothing on the face of the papers by which it can be determined whether there is a requisite number of electors of the various precincts. The papers filed are valid in that respect. The court also says that the plain meaning of the law is that the city is a nominating division for an officer to be elected by the electors of the entire city, and a ward is a nominating division applied to candidates to be voted for by the voters of the ward, while in an election district candidates are to be voted for by the voters of the district.

The court is of the opinion that the nominations of officers of the election boards is void, but that the nominations for ward officers are valid. It is then stated:

As to the Twenty-Seven Papers.

There are 27 papers from a number of different wards before us upon the same objections, and in each the commissioners should be directed to omit the nomination for recorder and officers for election boards, but should print the names of the ward officers, including candidates for council, upon the official ballot.

Judge Elliott Rodgers handed down an opinion declaring that the name of Frank McAnnich shall be printed on the tickets from Stowe township as the Republican candidate for justice of the peace. It was claimed he had not been a resident of the borough for one year.

The court says McAnnich has held the office of justice of the peace under appointment of the governor since August, 1902, and that the question raised is not properly a subject of inquiry, the law providing a complete remedy where a person has been elected who is alleged to be ineligible to hold the office to which he has been elected.

In common pleas court No. 3 the objections to the certificate of nomination of the Democratic party of the Twenty-first ward were dismissed at the request of the objectors.

In the matter of the objections to the nominations of C. F. Henson and others on the Republican ticket in Stowe township, they were dismissed by Judge Elliott Rodgers.

Citizens Ticket Stands.

The contention between the two factions of the Citizens party of the Thirty-second ward was settled yesterday in common pleas court No. 1 before Judges F. H. Collier and James R. Macfarlane. One faction claimed the other ticket was void on the grounds that none of the signers to the certificate were those who had taken out the patent for the name at the election a year ago. Judge Collier held that the attaching of the objectors patent was a mere surplusage, and that the ticket objected to was good for the reason that the persons patenting the name "Citizens" had filed no nomination papers, and that as they could not use their patent they could not object. The objections were dismissed and the Citizens thereby keep a place on the ballot.

It was developed that objections had been filed to a ticket in the same ward headed by Haymaker. It was marked filed, but no one about the court house could identify the handwriting, but the objections were sustained on technical grounds.

Judge F. H. Collier handed down an opinion dismissing the petition for a peremptory mandamus against the election board of Brackenridge to compel it to receive votes for and against local option. The borough was taken out of the township and the latter will vote on this question at the coming election.

The court says it has agreed that the prayer cannot be granted on the grounds that neither the act of assembly nor the law casts any duty on the election officers to return the votes taken by them to the election officers of Harrison township. It is declared the proper duty of the election officers is to receive the votes and make returns to the clerk.

OPPOSES AMALGAMATION.

President Burns of Window Glass Workers Issues an Open Letter to Constituents.

President Simon Burns of the Window Glass Workers' association, in an open letter issued yesterday, says that he opposes the movement to amalgamate the rival organizations, showing that the advantage would simply be handed to the newer organization. He anticipates the window glass blowing machine, but doubts that it will at once make glass of high standard.

Burns takes it that the American Window Glass Company, owning the machine patents, will shortly control production. He declares that the American company will be making window glass long after rival concerns are forgotten, and suggests to his constituents that they remember that it is through this company that they have received all advantages that the workers have been given in working conditions in years past.

Many at School of Design Exhibit.

More persons attended the exhibition of the School of Design during the four days' session that ended yesterday than ever did before in the history of the organization. During the display in the Penn building it was given out by the officers that they will push the plans they have formed for increasing the facilities and broadening the scope of the school.

AMALGAMATED ASSOCIATION HAS NOT INDORSED WILLIAM B. HAYS

John Williams, secretary and treasurer of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers, yesterday took occasion to place the position of his organization in the right light and go on record for John C. Haymaker. He says:

"It is becoming apparent that an effort is being made to create the impression that the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers has indorsed the candidacy of William B. Hays for city recorder and is desirous of seeing him elected.

"The Amalgamated association has not indorsed the candidacy of Mr. Hays, neither has it indorsed the organization known as the Union Workingmen's Association of Allegheny county. Any members of the Amalgamated association who are members of the Union Workingmen's Association of Allegheny county acted on their own responsibility and are in no way representing the Amalgamated association.

"So far as I am individually concerned, I am sure that I have weighed the issues of the campaign and have fully made up my mind to vote for Mr. Haymaker. I am firmly convinced that he is better qualified and fitted to give the city the administration it should have.

"He stands on a platform that can certainly be approved by people in all walks of life. He has said repeatedly in his speeches that he will insist on union hours and union wages for the city employes and men who know Mr. Haymaker declare that when he says a thing he means it.

"It is plain that party lines have been obliterated in this contest and the time has arrived when men and not party should be taken into consideration.

"I emphatically disagree with the statement made on the stump by some of Mr. Hays' supporters that moral character is not to be considered in this campaign. I am satisfied that good citizens deplore the attacks made in Citizens party meetings on ministers and prominent church workers who have taken a stand publicly for Mr. Haymaker.

"I believe that this kind of campaign is turning many votes to Mr. Haymaker."

WILL PURGE THE PADDED LISTS

Republicans Will Call Citizen Registers Into the Courts.

ONE VERY BAD DISTRICT

It Is Claimed That in This Division There Were 178 Illegal Voters on the Rolls—Larkin Will Read Figures.

Purging of padded registry lists will begin in the courts tomorrow. Many of the registers in the city are affiliated with the Bigelow machine, and judging from reports at Republican headquarters, some of them have endeavored to do the best they could to swell the number of votes for "reform."

One district has been found where 178 illegal registrations have been made. This is the worst of the lot, but there are a number of bad ones. The first case will be taken up in the morning. It is believed that sufficient evidence can be produced to prove to the court that the rolls should be purged. The padding is found in a number of wards.

Controller John B. Larkin announces that he is going on the stump this week. He believes that his presence is necessary. His principal work will be an endeavor to defend the proposed appropriation ordinances. Yesterday afternoon he was found buried beneath an avalanche of figures. They will be read to the Hays supporters each night during the week.

Have a Special Attraction.

The Bigelow machine has arranged for a meeting in Turner hall South Side, tomorrow evening. Postal cards have been sent out announcing an array of orators who will defend the machine. At the bottom of the announcement this attraction is announced:

"Our next city recorder, with the Hon. 'Andy' Fulton, will be present."

Headquarters of the Young Men's Republican club will be established tomorrow in Fifth avenue, Oakland, in the Fourteenth ward, and will be in charge of the campaign committee of the ward. The rooms will be open every day from 9 a. m. until 11 p. m. Each evening between 8 and 10 o'clock good speakers will make short addresses. All the Republican voters in the ward are requested to make this their headquarters during the campaign.

The growth of the Young Men's Republican club has been remarkable, and hundreds of young men have enlisted to do earnest work for John C. Haymaker during the present campaign. The club includes in its membership no representative colored men, who are doing good work among voters of their race.

It is presumed that the Citizens party in the Homewood district of the Twenty-first ward has a hard time in getting campaign arguments in that they have taken up the unusual action of maligning private citizens in their work against the Republican party.

Mr. Herrick's Denial.

One of the absurd features of the parade held by the Citizens Thursday night in Homewood was the rabid literature circulated, stating that G. T. Herrick, referred to thereon as "a speaker for the Republican ticket," stated that "a school director should not be chosen from the class of men that carry a dinner bucket. Children of the school would have no respect for him," etc. This assertion Mr. Herrick denies as absolutely false, and makes an affidavit. On tracing its origin he states that it is a misrepresented argument, and he can find no witness to his having made the statement, and would be pleased to find any witness. Men who were present at the alleged time and place are ready and willing to make affidavit that Mr. Herrick made no such statement or said anything that could be construed as such.

Numerous letters of various citizens from Pittsburgh and Allegheny have been received the past week by the Rev. S. Edward Young in response to his request last Sunday that all classes of citizens make suggestions as to the possible improvements in the public affairs of the two cities. In the light of these letters and his own personal studies of the conditions, the Rev. Mr. Young will preach a sermon this morning at Second Presbyterian church on "City Problems of Pittsburgh and Allegheny and the Coming Election."

W. S. Guffey says that the Jacksonian party will poll more votes for Haymaker than Hays will get from the Bigelow wing of the Democracy. He predicts that the entire East End will go for Haymaker, and that the Twentieth ward will give him a majority of 1,000.

THEY WANT HOUSES BUILT

East Pittsburgh People Petition Westinghouse Company.

A petition signed by nearly 1,000 residents of East Pittsburgh was presented to the management of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company yesterday asking the company to interest itself in the matter of securing homes for the thousands who work there and are obliged to live at a distance from their work because they are unable to secure houses in the borough.

Similar conditions exist in every town in the Monongahela and Turtle Creek valleys and rents have reached enormous proportions. The house famine has existed in East Pittsburgh for five years. The town has a population of nearly 6,000 people and the number could be increased to 10,000 were there houses enough. The petition asks that tenement houses similar to those at Wilmerding be erected at once. There are hundreds of desirable vacant lots in the borough owned by the East Pittsburgh Improvement Company, the real estate department of the Westinghouse interests, and it is thought the petition will be favorably considered by the company.

LESLIE SAYS BROWN LIES

City Chairman and Others Deny the Councilmanic "Graft" Story.

WHAT THEY DID SAY

Bigelow Agent Is Convicted of Twisting a Conversation in the Hope of Making Capital for the Machine He Represents.

Councilman Thomas M. Brown of the Twentieth ward, who has excelled in political acrobatic feats in this campaign, stands convicted of deliberately twisting a conversation in the hope of making capital of the Bigelow machine he is representing on the stump.

In his speech in the Thirty-seventh ward Friday night, after paying his regards to the ministers of the gospel who espouse the cause of decency in this contest, he gave utterance to the following, claiming that he was quoting from a conversation with M. G. Leslie, chairman of the Republican city committee:

"It's an awful thing to see this great government going into the hands of such people. Why, the shady propositions downtown are worth $250,000 a year to us, and we won't let them have it."

The falsehood was promptly denied yesterday by Mr. Leslie, Councilman Joseph C. Wasson and Alexander J. Negley. After the nomination of Hays there was a conference of a number of Twentieth ward Citizens, at which Mr. Leslie was present. There were some remarks made about "graft," but not in the language quoted by Brown, as the following statements will show. Mr. Leslie has this to say of Brown's attempt to twist his utterances:

Leslie Says Brown Lies.

"Brown and 20 others were present when the statement was made which Brown pretends to quote. I was called upon to explain how the opposition would get back the money it was putting into the fight. I suggested that one source of revenue would be the sale of the privileges for faro games, roulette, poker games and pool rooms, something which has not been done in this city since 1888. A revenue from that, I said, might be made to aggregate $200,000 or $250,000 a year.

"I said that one of the hardest and most serious problems that ever confronted a municipality was that which confronted Pittsburgh in 1888, when J. O. Brown, as director of the department of public safety, cleaned up the city and closed up all the gambling resorts and all other vices that had been fostered and nursed by the administration of Andrew Fulton and William McCallin.

"Under these administrations, I said, tolls were collected by men prominently connected with the Citizens movement in this campaign. If they want me to name the man who made the collections I might possibly do so.

"There never was uttered by any man, privately or publicly a more deliberate lie, and I am satisfied a premeditated lie, than that which was uttered by Thomas M. Brown."

Corroborated by Wasson.

Councilman Joseph C. Wasson was asked to tell what he understood Leslie to have said at the conference alluded to. He said:

"I was present at the conference Mr. Brown speaks of and would say emphatically that Mr. Leslie said not make the statement Brown quoted him as making.

"What he did say was this: 'You perhaps remember that several years ago when Pittsburgh was known as a wide open town, and its vices sold for $250,000 a year, this man Hays was supposed to be the person who made the contracts and collected the money. Knowing what we do of his past connection with this class of people it certainly would not do to place him in a position where he could again make this a city of corruption and vice.'

Mr. Negley corroborated this, declaring emphatically that Brown had told what was not true.

William B. Hays and ex-Mayor Fulton deny that they had anything to do with the collection of "graft."

Burns Found the Hole.

Walter D. McClelland of Brushton attended the meeting on Friday night at which Brown made his speech. This is what he says:

"I notice the papers have left out the most interesting part of Thomas M. Brown's address. He said that before coming to the meeting Mr. Rodgers told him not to talk too long, as he might talk himself in a hole. Then he said:

"'I will not talk long, as I do not wish to talk myself into a hole; for the Haymakers will need all the holes they can find in Pittsburgh to hide themselves in after election day.'

"It wasn't two minutes after making this statement that Brown had filled one of these holes. He pointed to John C. Haymaker and said:

"'Do not judge the man by himself; but judge the man by the companions he associates with.'

"Before making this statement Brown said that he and Haymaker had been friends and companions ever since he (Brown) was a child, and up until now had been the closest of friends and companions.

"Here is where Mr. Brown fell in a hole himself without thinking. He said that the friends and companions of Haymaker were all thieves and robbers and lawbreakers. Here I repeat the words he used:

"'Do not judge a man by himself, but judge him by the companions he associates with.'

"I think by the time election day comes the Citizens will have all the holes in the city filled, if these speakers do not stop talking themselves into holes."

Gusher at Axleton Afire.

The new gas well of the Liggett Spring and Axle company at the new town of Axleton, opposite Monongahela, caught fire yesterday and the derrick was destroyed without further damage. The well is of 800 pound pressure. Pittsburghers formerly connected with the Park Steel company, now part of the Crucible Steel company of America, control the Liggett company.

ORATORS WILL BE VERY BUSY

Rallies to Be Held in Kenwood Lawn and Old City Hall.

THE WARD GATHERINGS

Candidate Haymaker Will Speak in Every Part of the City During the Closing Days of the Campaign.

During the closing week of the campaign the Republican orators will be busy. Many meetings will be held, but two will be of special importance. Thursday evening there will be a rally for the East End voters, irrespective of party affiliations in Kenwood Lawn. Saturday night Old City hall will be the scene of one of the greatest political gatherings held in the history of the city.

The men who sign the call for the Kenwood Lawn meeting indicate the character of the supporters of Mr. Haymaker in the East End. These are the signers: D. P. Black, John I. Brown, R. D. McGonigle, W. H. Mclaney, W. S. Guffey and T. D. Evans.

The press bureau of the Bigelow machine has not given out anything concerning the movements of William B. Hays during the week. It is probable that numerous meetings will be held and the attacks on Christianity by the machine orators will not be abated.

Busy Week for Orators.

The following are the meetings and speakers scheduled for each night during the week:

Monday evening—Shakespeare school, Shakespeare street, Twentieth ward; speakers, John C. Haymaker, George H. Stengel, E. B. Vaill and William M. Hall. Speakers, John C. Haymaker, W. A. Blakeley and J. M. Clarke.

Saturday evening—Old City hall. Among the speakers at this meeting, which is expected will be the largest meeting of the campaign, will be John C. Haymaker, J. McF. Carpenter, W. A. Blakeley, J. C. Wasson, George H. Stengel and C. Chalfant. Arrangements are now being made for this gathering. The hall will be tastefully and appropriately decorated for the occasion and an immense outpouring of advocates of good government and friends of the Republican candidate for city recorder is expected.

NEW DEVELOPMENT CO.

Proposes to Operate Coal, Oil, Gas, Timber and Mineral Lands.

A new corporation, to be known as the Ohio Coal, Land, Oil and Development Company, will open for business in this city on March 1. The company is incorporated under the laws of South Dakota with a capital of $1,200,000, one-half of which is preferred stock and the rest common, divided into 120,000 shares of a par value of $10 each, to be underwritten by the Union Trust Company.

The officers are: President, William H. Neely, real estate broker, Pittsburgh; secretary, Matthew C. Anderson, wholesale dealer in provisions and produce, Pittsburgh; treasurer, Philip Baumgart, a Pittsburgh capitalist; vice president, John L. Moore, a land owner at Mohawk, O.; second vice president, S. C. Priest, a wholesale stock dealer of Greersville, O. The Pittsburgh office will be at No. 104 Nineteenth street, South Side, and will be managed by the president.

The company now controls 2,500 acres of the Coshocton (O.) bituminous coal, 1,500 acres of the Brookville coal and about 2,000 acres of cannel or gas coal. The bituminous vein is about 40 feet under the cannel vein. In addition, the company has 200 acres of land underlaid with a four-foot vein of red ochre and large deposits of limestone, fire clay and silica. Over 500 acres of its land are covered with white oak, red oak, poplar, walnut and maple. A considerable part of its property has been tested for oil and gas with good results.

As soon as the weather opens the company will lay out at least two town sites and begin the erection of 100 frame houses for workingmen. A paint plant to cost $50,000 is also to be erected this summer to make use of the deposits of ochre. The property is along the lines of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company and of the Cleveland, Akron & Columbus railroad, thus giving it excellent facilities for shipping the mineral products.

Work of One Traction Car.

An Avalon traction car jumped the track in Taggart street, Allegheny, yesterday, and before it could be stopped it broke a telegraph pole in two, demolished a mail box, broke a sewer lid and crashed into the front of the store of D. A. Vansdale. Many windows in the car were smashed, but none of the passengers were hurt.

HAYMAKER IS WELL PLEASED

His Tour of the Lawrenceville District Has Been a Success.

IN H. K. PORTER'S WORKS

Most of the Men Employed in the Shops of the Congressman Told the Republican Candidate That They Are for Him.

"Not since the campaign opened have I felt so much encouraged by the results of a personal canvass as I do today over my visit to the workingmen of the Lawrenceville district," said Candidate John C. Haymaker yesterday, after his tour of four of the large industrial plants that line the banks of the Allegheny river.

"My reception at the different works we visited today was really refreshing, and my talks with the men have greatly enthused me. I am convinced that the large majority of the workingmen of the Lawrenceville district are with me in this cause, and I feel that I will be spurred on with greater energy during the closing week of the campaign. Even those workmen who acknowledged they were against me were uniformly friendly and courteous, and the hundreds who declared they were for me took the greatest pains to show me every courtesy to make my visit to the mills pleasant and fruitful."

Mr. Haymaker was accompanied yesterday by Police Magistrate Samuel F. Kerr of the Fifteenth ward and a representative of the press. The plants visited were those of the H. K. Porter locomotive works, in Forty-ninth street, the Howe-Brown works of the Crucible Steel Company, the Mackintosh-Hemphill works, in Twelfth street, and the boiler works of R. Munroe & Sons, in Twenty-third street.

In the Howe-Brown Works.

The morning was spent at the Howe-Brown works, in Seventeenth street, where Mr. Haymaker was shown through the mills through the courtesy of D. W. Dunlevy, the manager. Every department was visited and it was found that all the men, with but a very few exceptions, have declared themselves openly for Mr. Haymaker. One of the foremen in the rolling mill said to Mr. Haymaker:

You need not feel the slightest anxiety as to where our men stand. We are all for you in this department. Many of our men voted the Citizens ticket last fall, but they don't approve of Mr. Bigelow's conduct in forcing the nomination of Mr. Hays. We are for you to a finish.

Another foreman stated that several of his men were Democrats, but had declared they would not stand for Hays. They have lined themselves up with the Jacksonian party and will vote for Mr. Haymaker. The Howe-Brown works employ about 600 men, most of whom are voters residing in Pittsburgh. Mr. Haymaker is satisfied from the talks he had with the men that the greater number of them favor his candidacy and will vote for him. Many of the men were already supplied with campaign buttons, and displayed them proudly as Mr. Haymaker passed among them, shaking hands.

"We're all right," said one big fellow pointing down the line of workmen at the rolls, each of whom had a miniature portrait of Mr. Haymaker either on his coat or cap.

In one of the mills the workmen dropped their tools momentarily and rushed forward to shake hands with Mr. Haymaker, as he entered. "There's our man," called out one of the workmen. "There's Haymaker."

"We heard you were coming," said another workman, as he was introduced to the candidate. "The boys will all be right glad to see you. We have no use for the Citizens party any longer. The Republican party has the right kind of stuff in it now, and the right kind of a candidate. I believe you will be elected, and I know you will get three votes from my family."

The boiler works of R. Munroe & Sons, in Twenty-third street, was visited. Maj. Munroe, a veteran of the Civil war, escorted the party through the plant. Nearly all the men were found to be favorable to Mr. Haymaker's candidacy.

In Congressman Porter's Mills.

At 11:30 the party visited the works of the H. K. Porter Company, through the courtesy of Mr. Lord, the general manager. It was shortly after 12 when the party entered the works, and an hour was spent in a tour of the different departments. The works were closed down for the lunch hour, and a better time to see the men could not have been arranged, as the men were gathered in knots. Many of them hailed Mr. Haymaker as he approached, and he received many words of encouragement and pledges of support from the men.

About 400 men were found in the works, very few of them going home to luncheon. One of the foremen stated that he had made a careful canvass, and found that with the exception of one department the greater portion of the men have already declared themselves for Mr. Haymaker. They declared that they could not stand for Hays, notwithstanding the fact that they had supported the Citizens ticket last fall. The machinists and foundrymen are for Mr. Haymaker to a man. In fact, nearly all the skilled workmen in the works are for Mr. Haymaker, and not only intend to vote for him, but will use their influence to induce others to vote for him. One of the workmen said to the press representative:

I am glad Mr. Haymaker came out here. It has been reported that most of our men were for Hays and I wanted him to see how the boys stand. I voted the Citizens ticket last fall, but I am done with Bigelow methods. I think the Citizens party as it is now conducted is one of the most corrupt political organizations that ever got a foothold in any municipality in this country. It has done more to corrupt the young men of the city in six months than the Republican organization did in fourteen years. I sincerely hope the managers of this Hays campaign will get the rebuke they deserve at the polls on the 17th, and they will get it, too, if I am not greatly mistaken.

People Know Hays.

People have come to know the Citizens candidate for what he is, and there is an undercurrent of opinion that is going to sweep Bigelow in favor of Mr. Haymaker. I wouldn't be a bit surprised if the election would result in a veritable landslide for Mr. Haymaker. I am satisfied he is gaining ground every day.

Cheers for the candidate were heard on every hand as Mr. Haymaker and his party passed through the works, and many of the men were found to be already supplied with campaign buttons bearing Mr. Haymaker's portrait. In speaking of his tour of the H. K. Porter works afterwards, Mr. Haymaker said he was most agreeably surprised at the hearty reception accorded him by the men. He said he felt most amply repaid for the trip, and believed the majority of the men he met would stand by him.

After taking luncheon in Lawrenceville the party proceeded to the works of the Mackintosh-Hemphill Company, at the foot of Twelfth street. William McFadden, the vice president and general manager of the company, conducted the party through the plant and extended every courtesy to Mr. Haymaker. He said to Mr. Haymaker, at the close of the tour of the works:

I am only sorry that you did not have another hour to spend with the men. We close at 4 on Saturdays and the men then hurry to their homes. We employ about 900 men, and you have met a great many of them, but we could have seen more of them if we had had an earlier start. I shall be glad to show you through again should you desire. I want to assure you that I am for you and that I will use all the influence I possess in favor of your candidacy. I have looked over the ground pretty thoroughly and I feel satisfied that you will be elected.

Men Are With Him.

The works of the Mackintosh-Hemphill company cover about seven acres, and the trip through the various departments was necessarily hurried. In the big machine shops, where ponderous stationary engines of 10,000 horse-power are set up and tested before shipping, many skilled mechanics were found, who, almost to a man, declared themselves for Mr. Haymaker.

"We're mighty glad to see you," said one big machinist, wiping the grease from his hand and shaking the hand of the candidate. "Don't you worry about the boys here; they're all for you to a finish. We've no use for the Bigelow-Hays outfit."

Another machinist stated to the press representative that he voted the Citizens ticket last fall, but could not stand for Hays. He said his wife had asked him the other night who he was for for city recorder. He told her he would vote for and support Mr. Haymaker. Her response was: "That's the man to vote for, John. See that you don't make any mistake about it. Whatever you do, don't vote the Citizens ticket. The Citizens orators say that morals have nothing to do with the candidate in this election. I wish the women had a vote this time; they would show whether morals had anything to do with the candidate."

On leaving the works of the Mackintosh-Hemphill company the itinerary for the day was brought to a close, and Mr. Haymaker hurried home to get a brief rest before going out to the evening meetings to which he was scheduled. Tomorrow morning he will again visit the Lawrenceville district, and will then go to the South Side mills.

FEAR DEMORALIZATION OF GLASS BUSINESS

COLUMBUS, O., Feb. 7.—The Federation Window Glass company has issued a call for a convention of glass manufacturers of the country to meet here February 18. It is understood the purpose is to discuss a threatening demoralization of the glass industry through the introduction of the machine by the American Window Glass company, which will take the place of blowers. The American company promises to have representatives at the meeting.

"I Grow Hair In One Night."

A Famous Doctor-Chemist Has Discovered a Secret Compound That Grows Hair on Any Bald Head.

His Startling Announcement, Accompanied By Absolute Proof of Wonderful Cures, Causes Doctors to Marvel and Stand Dumfounded.

THE DISCOVERER SENDS FREE TRIAL PACKAGES TO ALL WHO WRITE.

MLLE. RIVA,
Famous French Contralto.

After half a century spent in the laboratory, crowned with high honors for his many world-famous discoveries the celebrated physician-chemist at the head of the great Altenheim Medical Dispensary, has just made the startling announcement that he has produced a compound that grows hair on any bald head. The doctor makes the claim that after experiments, taking years to complete, he has at last reached the goal of his ambition. To the doctor all heads are alike. There are none which cannot be cured by this remarkable remedy. The record of the cures already made is truly marvelous and were it not for the high standing of the great physician and the convincing testimony of thousands of citizens all over the country it would seem too miraculous to be true.

Mlle. Riva, 140 Avenue des Champs Elysees, the famous Parisian Contralto, whose wonderfully luxuriant tresses add charm to a most bewitching personality says: "I procured a set of the Foso Remedies while touring the States and they actually caused my hair to grow anew. We have in Paris such a bewildering array of hair dressings it seems strange we must go to the States for one that will make the hair grow. I had for several years been losing my hair, had tried everything and was finally obliged to wear switches to keep up appearances. I am happy to say that with the Foso Remedies my hair is now more luxuriant than it ever was and am thankful to feel it is all my own and cannot fall off to embarrass me."

GEO. N. THATCHER,
Prominent Railway Official.

Geo. N. Thatcher of Covington, Ky., a prominent railway official whose duties are very exacting was rapidly losing all his hair. He says:

"I was getting so bald and such a shining mark for my friends that I was forced into using hair remedies. I tried a dozen or more before I ran across the Foso Treatment, and am glad to say that it was well rewarded. My entire scalp is now thickly covered with long, dark hair of the natural shade and I know beyond question that the Foso Remedies caused this result. I do not hesitate to lend my name and influence to these thoroughly trustwor

DECIDED TRIUMPH WAS SCORED BY MIKADO CLUB

Production of "Brian Boru" Drew Crowded Houses Each Evening.

[SPECIAL TELEGRAM TO THE GAZETTE.]

NEW CASTLE, PA., Feb. 7.—The production here this week of the opera "Brian Boru" by the Mikado club, the leading musical organization of the city, scored a decided triumph for the 100 or more persons in the cast, who composed many of the leading society people of the city. The opera was given Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings at the opera house and standing room was at a premium every night, while a premium of $5 was offered for seats without securing them. The scene of the opera is laid in Ireland, in the eleventh century, when the Irish were attempting to drive the British from the isle. Brian Boru, a native chief, was chosen king of Ireland. He was beloved by Erida, sister of one of his chiefs, but the Princess Elfrida, which character was taken by Miss Anna Gertrude Clark, soprano of St. Andrew's church of Pittsburgh, attempted to win Brian's affections, and so lead to his capture by the British. The opera was given under the musical direction of Prof. Parke V. Hogan of this city, and Mr. Hugh Marquis was business manager. About $800 was cleared in the production, a part of which goes to the Shenango Valley hospital of this city. The leading characters were John Taranalis Thomas as Brian Boru, Miss Anna Gertrude Clark as the Princess Elfrida, Miss Sue Harvard as Erida, Miss Emma Baumann as the Baby Malone, and Miss Mabel Crawford as the fairy queen.

BIG COAL SUIT DECIDED.

Land-Owners Cannot Recover for Anthracite Under Chestnut Size.

WILKESBARRE, PA., Feb. 7.—(Special.)—The owners of coal property cannot recover for the value of coal smaller than the chestnut size, according to an opinion made by Judge Ferris today. It was in the suit of a number of coal land owners for $250,000 damages against the Consumers Coal Company. They sought to recover their share of the market value of pea, buckwheat, bird's eye and the sizes below chestnut.

Their contract had been made before the modern machinery allowed the marketing of coal below chestnut, and the land owners contended they should get royalty for all that was sold. The decision saves the coal operators millions of dollars.

Confessed Stealing Beer.

GREENSBURG, PA., Feb. 7.—(Special.)—Pennsylvania Railroad Detective Sharretts of Derry and William Robinson of Conemaugh yesterday arrested David and Robert King, Robert Colgay, Alexander Shultz, Oscar Mickey and Frank Fricklgiss near Vandergrift on the charges of larceny. On November 20 152 kegs of beer were stolen from a car on the West Penn railroad at Kiskiminetas junction, and the suspects pleaded guilty to having stolen the beer at a hearing before Justice W. P. Altman of Vandergrift.

Conlin and Simpson Convicted.

GREENSBURG, PA., Feb 7.—(Special.)—After deliberating for a large part of the night, the jury this morning agreed upon a verdict in the Irwin bank robbery case. "Farmer John" Conlin and Robert Simpson, were found guilty of the charges of breaking and entering, receiving stolen goods and larceny, and were recommended in each instance to the mercy of the court. Conlin and Simpson received the verdict with indifference.

TWO MEN CHARGED WITH COUNTERFEITING

Prisoner at Connellsville Said to Have Made Full Confession.

[SPECIAL TELEGRAM TO THE GAZETTE.]

CONNELLSVILLE, PA., Feb. 7.—William Hostetter and Daniel Enfield are under arrest here charged with counterfeiting. Their arrest has led to the discovery of a gang of spurious coin makers who have been operating in Laurel Hill mountains for several years. United States officers came here from Pittsburgh tonight and an expedition will go to where the base of operations is said to be.

Hostetter, it is said, has turned state's evidence and revealed the names of the other members of the gang. He was arrested some days ago on a charge of assault, made by his wife. The house was searched and a counterfeiter's stamp and metal were found.

Before Justice Frank Mill, Hostetter told the names of his accomplices and the location of the counterfeiting den in Laurel Hill mountains, near Indian Head. He also directed the officers to a hollow log, where dies and other instruments were found. Silver coins and bank notes have been made. Hostetter's confession also mentions the printing of bogus insurance policies, with which mountain people have been swindled.

Hostetter warned the officers to be careful in approaching the place, as he said it was guarded night and day. Enfield and Hostetter have served time in the penitentiary. They are also suspected of a number of robberies recently committed in the mountain region.

MARRIAGE CEREMONY ON THE OHIO RIVER

EAST LIVERPOOL, O., Feb. 7.—(Special.)—Charles A. Chambers of Chambersburg, O., and Miss Abby S. Rogers, daughter of A. S. Rogers of Wellsville, were married on the Ohio river on Thursday evening. The wedding place was selected because the groom-elect had made the mistake of securing his marriage license in West Virginia, with the expectation of being married in Wellsville. Chambers, his prospective bride and the Rev. W. C. Prewitt of Wellsville were rowed to the West Virginia side of the river, the boat anchored and the ceremony performed.

Court Officers Appointed.

BUTLER, PA., Feb. 7. (Special).—Judge James M. Galbreath today appointed Edward S. Riddle court stenographer; Miss Ada G. Finley, assistant stenographer. Capt. F. Michael Remno and Capt. John G. Librarian to Write Things.

ST. PAUL, MINN., Feb. 7.—(Special.)—Dr. James K. Hosmer, librarian of the Minneapolis public library, will resign soon. He has already entered into a contract with Harper's for literary work, and although he will not be required to engage himself in this work for three or four years, he feels that he will need a year or two preparation.

Tobacco Deal Involves $2,000,000.

LOUISVILLE, KY., Feb. 7.—(Special).—The largest tobacco rehandling house in the world will pass into the hands of the trust as soon as the papers have been signed. Terms have been accepted whereby for a consideration of approximately $2,000,000 the British-American Tobacco company obtains control of the plant of U. S. Matthews & Sons.

AMPUTATED HIS OWN LEG WITH CARPENTER'S TOOLS

YORK, PA., Feb. 7.—(Special.)—Dissatisfied with the amputation of his left foot, which the surgeons had performed for gangrene, Carl A. Seigman, an aged citizen of South End, without the knowledge of his nurse, procured several carpenter tools and amputated a portion of his leg, removing bone and flesh. The tools were sharp and the operation was neatly performed. No evil results have followed.

CONSTABLE KILLED ALLEGED ASSAILANT

Knocked Victim Over Embankment and Surrendered to the Police.

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS TO THE GAZETTE.]

SCRANTON, Feb. 7.—The dead body of Michael Roman was found on an embankment north of Olyphant station early this morning. His skull was fractured and it was evident he had been dead for several hours. The mystery was cleared up by this afternoon when Constable Michael Gaughan of Olyphant gave himself up to the police and confessed that he was the cause of Roman's death. He said he was waylaid by Roman and another Hungarian last night and assaulted. He struck Roman on the forehead with his fist and sent him reeling over the embankment. It is supposed he struck headforemost on a stone and crushed his skull.

Gaughan is the prosecutor in the case against three Olyphant Hungarians charged with the brutal murder of James Umston, a non-union man, September 17 last. Ever since the indictment was found Gaughan says he has been annoyed and threatened by Roman and other friends of the trio charged with the Umston murder. Gaughan says he did not know he had seriously injured Roman until he learned of the finding of his body, as he fled as soon as he struck him to get away from the other man, who was assailing him.

Fog Convicted of Leyden Wreck.

KING O'KEAFFE'S WIDOW FIGHTS FOR ESTATE

First Lady of Land of Yap Is Promised Trouble by an American Attorney.

[SPECIAL TELEGRAM TO THE GAZETTE.]

SAVANNAH, GA., Feb. 7.—Col. Walter C. Hartridge of the law firm of O'Connor, O'Bryne & Hartridge, left today for the island of Yap, in the Caroline group, to secure the property of David O'Keaffe, king of Yap, for the widow and daughter of the "King," who live in this city. The estate is valued at $2,000,000.

Col. Hartridge gave out some interesting new matter in the shape of a possible contest for the property. When O'Keaffe became King he did not long lack for a "first lady," despite the fact that he had a wife and child in Savannah, and married by the rites of the island the best-looking woman among his subjects.

By this union there was born at least one daughter, who should now be about 18 years old. She is said to be in a convent in Hongkong.

GIBSON WILL FAILS.

Judge Refuses to Probate Stenographer's Notes Which Showed Millionaire's Intentions.

CINCINNATI, O., Feb. 7.—Judge Nippert today refused to receive for probate the copy of the will of the late John McCormick Gibson, a millionaire, in which he made Miss Henrietta Cecilia Wolfe his heir. Miss Wolfe married him on his death bed and he died a week later.

The original will could not be found and a copy made from stenographer's notes was presented.

The court said the copy was shown to be a true one, but the evidence did not show that the testator had not revoked the will. By this decision the bulk of the estate of Gibson is inherited by his mother and brother.

Liver Ills

DR. RADWAY & CO., New York:

Dear Sirs—I have been sick for nearly two years, and have been doctoring with some of the most expert doctors of the United States. I have been bathing and drinking hot water at the Hot Springs, Ark., but it seemed everything failed to do me good. After I saw your advertisement I thought I would try your pills, and have nearly used two boxes; been taking two at bedtime and one after breakfast, and they have done me more good than anything else I have ever used. My trouble has been with the liver. My skin and eyes were all yellow; I had sleepy, drowsy feelings; felt like a drunken man; pain right above the navel, like as if it were bile on top of the stomach. My bowels were costive. My mouth and tongue sore most of the time. Appetite fair, but food would not digest, but settle heavy on my stomach, and some few mouthfuls of food came up again. I could only eat light food that digests easily. Please send "Book of Advice." Respectfully,

BEN ZAUGG, Hot Springs, Ark.

B. WHITE

Four Doors From Corner | THE BIG ALLEGHENY STORE Old Nos. 85-87 Ohio Street. | Credit Free To All

LET WHITE START YOU A-HOUSE-KEEPING.

Let young married folks about to enter into the magical portals of 'Housekeeping' ponder over the reason why White is selling MORE 2, 3 AND 4 ROOM OUTFITS THAN ANY OTHER 2 FURNITURE HOUSES COMBINED!

Let the episode of Mr. and Mrs. ———— of Wilkinsburg bear weight! This young couple, acting upon the intention of setting up housekeeping in 3 rooms they had decided upon taking, made a tour of investigation through the Pittsburgh stores, but found the outlay at their command was but sufficient to furnish 2 rooms according to their desires. Hearing later, however, of the great opportunity at White's, they paid the Big Allegheny Store a visit, and are now living in their 3 beautifully furnished rooms—FURNISHED FROM WHITE'S AT THE SAME OUTLAY NECESSARY FOR A TWO ROOM FURNISHMENT AT ANY PITTSBURGH STORE.

There's a lesson in this instance that's worth learning. IT MEANS DOLLARS SAVED! It means, too, the opportunity of selection from the largest stocks of fine furniture and carpets in this part of the state. It means getting advantage of credit terms that guarantee the easiest payments and that take care of you should any possible obstacle arise.

There's a Carpet Floor, too, at White's with stocks that are not equalled by any store in Greater Pittsburgh and by but 6 stores in the entire United States. It reached its present immensity by offering the greatest Carpet and Rug values in Western Pensylvania.

On Ohio street, NOT on the corner of Sandusky, BUT 4 DOORS FROM THE CORNER, is where the Big Allegheny Store is located. It has no removal signs on it, because it is not going to move, but is going to spread out clear to the corner this Spring.

Come, see why YOU NEED HARDLY ANY MONEY AT WHITE'S!

2 Rooms Furnished Complete for $58.50 | 3 Rooms Furnished Complete for $85.00 | 4 Rooms Furnished Complete for $130.00

Just Compare These Three Homes:

The Mortgaged One.

Mr. Poor owns a house which is mortgaged for $2,000 at 6 per cent; he lives in it and pays his interest promptly for 16 years and 8 months. During this time he pays out $2,000 in interest, and still owes $2,000 principal — the same amount he owed to start.

The Rented One.

Mr. Smith owns a house worth $2,000 which he rents to Mrs. Brown for $18.00 per month. Mrs. Brown is a good tenant; she lives in the house for 16 years and 8 months, during which time she pays Mr. Smith $3,600 in rent and has absolutely nothing to show for it.

One of Our Homes.

Louis Henning, of 121 Charles St., Knoxville, takes out two of our contracts and pays us $10.00. Ten days later his contracts mature and he picks out his $2,000 house — we purchase the house—he moves in and pays us $11 per month. In 16 years and 8 months he will own his home absolutely clear.

WHICH IS THE HOME YOU WANT?

Conrad Paul—$2,000. Lyman, P. O.
J. S. Hunter—$2,000. Mt. Oliver.
Louis Henning—$2,000 121 Charles St., Mt. Oliver.

HOMESTEAD RIOT WOUND FINALLY CAUSED DEATH.

William Foy died suddenly yesterday at his home on Tenth avenue, West Homestead, aged 40 years. The deceased was known to nearly every resident of Homestead. Prior to the Homestead strike in 1892 he was employed in the converting mill of the Carnegie mills and on the morning of July 6, the day on which the eventful battle was fought, Foy was one of the first men to rush to the river front when it was announced that "Pinkertons" were coming, and he was the first to be shot in the battle between the officers and strikers.

Foy was shot in the breast in the first volley fired and was carried to his home in a dying condition. He recovered, however, but was confined to bed for nearly a year after the riot. For the past year he had been employed as a janitor in the West Homestead schools. The cause of his death is thought to be due to the old wound in his breast, from the effects of which he never fully recovered.

All mail orders promptly and carefully filled.

KAUFMANN'S

"THE BIG STORE"

A manufacturer's silk stock

SENT to us by our buyer, who is now in the east, with instructions to give the sale a good send-off in Sunday's ad. We've unpacked the goods, and they certainly merit a prominent place. We secured every yard on a 33 1-3 per cent basis, and turn the saving over to you.

The mill and factory sale a great "hit"

THIS is quite natural. Mills and manufacturers, who, either to raise money or to unload surplus stocks, are anxious to convert goods into cash, recognize this sale as the best means to accomplish their object. And the people thoroughly appreciate the extraordinary values this policy of buying mills' and manufacturers' stocks enables us to offer. Thus February, the end of the season, finds "The Big Store" as full of merchandise as during September, only at prices far lower.

White goods and linens

THIS will be a white goods season and to see the immensity of our stock, you'd really think we meant to supply the country. The output of several mills is represented in this sale tomorrow.

"Close-out" sale carpets, rugs

THAT'S the trade term for large purchases made from the manufacturer. A big Philadelphia carpet mill and two prominent rug makers had exceeded their days of grace in meeting payment for the raw material from which they made their goods; our buyer got a "tip," was first in the field and bought their entire stocks of made-up carpets and rugs for less than they actually cost the makers; then, too, there was a big salvage sale this last week and we secured the major part at big concessions. The time is now ripe for those contemplating re-covering floors to make extended purchases, for the saving possible tomorrow should not be ignored.

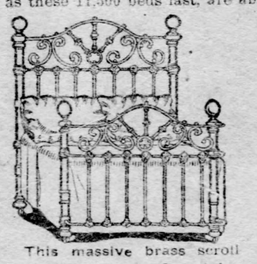
Those brass and iron beds are going fast

OVER 2,000 have already found purchasers—in one short week. The balance will go even quicker, as every one already sold will be the means of selling several more. The 13,500 beds embraced in this sale were, as previously announced, gathered in by us at divers times during the past 6 months. We kept close tab on the markets and when a maker found it necessary to close out a few hundred beds at a sacrifice in order to quickly raise cash to meet an emergency, we accommodated him. Owing to the increased cost of production, the makers have lately greatly advanced their prices. We, however, as long as these 11,500 beds last, are able to LOWER ours. Read on and see:



This massive brass scroll bed—also several other styles—all colors—2 in. post—regular price $20.00, annual sale price 14.98

This rococo design brass scroll center bed—also several other equally attractive styles—all colors—regular price $15, annual sale price 9.75

This bow extension foot brass scroll enamel bed—all colors and all sizes—regular price $10.00, annual sale price 6.75

This brass top extension foot enamel bed, brass trimmed—also choice from several other styles—regular price $7.50, annual sale price 4.49

This enamel bed, exactly as illustrated, brass trimmed—1 1-16 in. post—all sizes and all colors—regular price $4, annual sale price 2.98

This solid brass bed, with bow extension foot, 2 in. post, massive knobs—5 ply lacquer—regular price $35.00, annual sale price 28.75

Standard felt mattresses—in fancy striped tickings—all sizes—would be good value for $10.00, go in this sale for 6.75

Cotton top mattresses—carefully made and well bound—all sizes to fit all beds—kind usually sold for $2, in this sale at 1.49

Feather pillows—guaranteed odorless—weight 7 lbs., the kind usually sold for $2.00, in this sale at, per pair, 1.25

Bolsters to match, each, 1.25.

Ostermoor patent elastic felt mattresses like all other good things, have many imitations. Beware of all such. There is only one genuine "Ostermoor," and it can be obtained in Pittsburgh only at The Big Store. Not necessary to state anything about the superiority of these mattresses—All we want to say is that the Ostermoor mattresses are sold under a double guarantee—the maker's and ours—and that they are in no-wise inferior to the $40 hair mattresses, even if the price is only 15.00

Folding steel coil springs—strongly put together—100 springs in each—kind always sold for $2.50, in this sale at 2.25

Woven wire springs, to fit all kinds of wood and iron beds—all sizes—regular price $2.25, in this sale at 1.49

Box spring mattresses, made so as to fit any style of wood, brass or iron bed—kind usually sold for $12, in this sale at 8.75

$20.00 box springs at 12.75.

This solid brass bed—also several other styles—very massive—5 ply lacquer—regular price $75.00, annual sale price 49.75

MANY DEMOCRATS FAVOR PARKER FOR PRESIDENT

BRYAN'S NAME NOT EVEN MENTIONED

Olney, Hill and Gorman Are Considered Available Timber for Convention Use.

MANY ARE YET UNDECIDED

THE PITTSBURGH GAZETTE BUREAU,
Room 10, Postal Building.
WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 7.

Judge Alton B. Parker of New York is the favorite candidate of the Democratic party for president. Judge Parker's candidacy, however, has not progressed sufficiently to cause anything like an overwhelming sentiment to form in the party in favor of his nomination. Richard Olney of Massachusetts is not yet an important factor in the Democratic field. Senator-Elect Arthur P. Gorman of Maryland is being discussed as a candidate and would have many followers if he would indicate a willingness to have his name used. Former Governor David B. Hill of New York has a few friends, but no concerted movement in his favor is under way.

As for William J. Bryan, he is not thought of by the Democratic party as a presidential possibility. Nor is Tom L. Johnson of Ohio considered to be in the running.

These conclusions are drawn from the result of inquiries made of Democratic members of the senate and the house of representatives. The object of these inquiries was first to show whether Judge Parker or Mr. Olney was more in favor.

Inquiries at an early stage showed that as between Mr. Olney and Judge Parker there was no competition whatever, Judge Parker is far and away in the lead. But the most instructive feature of the poll was that a very large proportion of the Democrats of the country had not as yet made up their minds to support any candidate.

Of 71 Democratic representatives interviewed 9 have no choice and are for the best man, 23 are for Judge Parker, 3 are for Mr. Gorman, 2 for Mr. Olney, and 2 for Mr. Hill. Of 15 Democratic senators interviewed, 12 have no choice, being for the most available candidate, and 3 are for Judge Parker. Judge Parker's strength is widely scattered, indicating that he stands in favor in the north as well as in the south.

How the House Stands.

Here is a table showing the result of the poll of Democratic representatives:

Mr. Tillman of South Carolina said: "I have no one in mind just now who will unite the party, but I hope he will come to the front before convention day comes around."

Mr. Pettus of Alabama: "Unless we cease our backbiting and scrubbing among ourselves, we might as well nominate a yellow dog, for we stand not the slightest chance of winning so long as we remain hopelessly divided as to men and measures."

Mr. Jones of Arkansas, chairman of the national Democratic committee, said: "It is too early to indulge in speculation as to presidential preferences."

Who Is Coming to the Front as Democratic Candidate for President.

FIVE COAL BEDS UNDER CAMP SITE

Expert Engineer Reports to War Department on the Somerset Tract.

FUEL OF GOOD QUALITY

Geological Formation Accurately Described by Geo. M. Lehman, Assistant to Engineer Sibert. Three Analyses Submitted.

THE PITTSBURGH GAZETTE BUREAU,
Room 10, Postal Building.
WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 7.

Accompanying the report of Captain Sibert on Somerset as available for a permanent military camp site was one from his assistant, George M. Lehman, on coal underlying the property. Mr. Lehman describes the geological formation as follows:

"A thorough study of the geology of the territory under consideration is not possible with the ground covered with snow. It is true something could be accomplished by visiting the numerous farm coal operations, but as these mine the uppermost bed or beds of the series, much would be left to conjecture as to the structure, depth below surface and quality of the lower beds, especially in areas where mines do not exist. In addition to an inspection of the various mines, the coal crops and rock exposures should be examined to make the construction of the geological section across the property possible or at least to determine the persistence of the coal beds supposed to be contained in the area. The following general description is gathered from information received in the field and a report of the Pennsylvania geological survey:

"Practically the entire property is underlaid by coal beds of the lower productive measure. No extensive mines exist. What mining is being done is mostly along railroads, which skirt the southeastern edge of the property in Coxes Creek valley from Somerset to Rockwood. There are, however, numerous openings or farm mines throughout the property.

Are Five Coal Beds.

"Through the eastern half of the property extends the Somerset synclinal or basin, and through the western half the viaduct anticlinal, both lying in a northeasterly and southwesterly direction with a slight southwestern dip, and it is presumed that with a systematic mining development a down grade haul could be obtained which is favorable.

"There are about five coal beds underlying most of the property. At Levansville all coals are under the surface and at the mouth of Middle Creek all coal beds are above water surface and are contained in the hills to the north, which rise over 400 feet above the Casselman river. Near this point coal is mined. At Milford the B bed is mined and shows a thickness of three feet with slight slate parting. This coal makes a quick hot fire with little smoke.

"A short distance north of New Centreville the upper bench is mined and is said to yield three feet. It is only in the southernmost portion of the property that upper Freeport coal is largely missing, due in part to being cut out by Casselman valley and tributary streams. Both coal bed D and its constant underlying member, ferriferous lime stone, are undoubtedly persistent throughout most of the area and these outcroppings are also conspicuous along Middle Creek valley."

What a Section Shows.

The report then gives a vertical section at Rockwood, in the tract which shows that coal bed E is four feet below the surface, then an interval of 60 feet of clay, then two feet of coal D prime, then two feet of fireclay, then two of limestone, then an interval of 14 feet of clay, then 20 feet of Freeport sandstone, then bed D of coal which has a top layer of three feet of coal, one foot of fireclay shale and two feet of coal, then some slate, then five feet of ferriferous limestone, then three feet of fire clay, then 20 feet of sandstone boulders, then six feet of sandy shale, then an interval of 10 feet, then five feet of shales with iron ore bands two inches thick, then coal bed C one foot and six inches, then an interval of five feet of clay, then five feet of shale with ore balls, then 20 feet of sandstone, then two feet of slate, then four feet and six inches of coal bed B, then some fireclay, then an interval of 10 feet, then 10 feet of fireclay shale, then an interval of five feet and then two feet of coal at the surface of the water of Casselman river.

An analysis of the coal from the E bed, south of Somerset, shows that it contains 66 per cent of fixed carbon, a little over 15 per cent of ash, nearly 17 per cent of volatile matter, a little less than one per cent of sulphur and a similar amount of water.

PRINCESS CAN NEVER RETURN TO DRESDEN

[ASSOCIATED PRESS CABLE TO THE GAZETTE.]

DRESDEN, Feb. 7.—The separation of former Crown Princess Louise and Prof. Giron does not change the present legal situation and will not have the slightest effect on the divorce proceedings, which will be resumed February 11. The princess can never return to the Saxon court, but she may possibly effect a reconciliation with her own family and take up a permanent residence in Austria. The question of allowing the princess to see her children will only be decided by King George after the divorce court renders judgment.

King George called a council of the ministers today and submitted to them a telegraphic request from the former crown princess, sent through her lawyers, begging to see her son, Christian, who is dangerously ill. The decision, however, was that much as the ministers might sympathize with the mother, it was impossible to allow her to return here, as it would occasion popular excitement.

LECTURE ON TOLSTOI.

Ernest Crosby Will Tell of the Russian's Qualities.

Ernest H. Crosby of New York will give a free lecture on "Tolstoi, the Typical Democrat," at the First Unitarian church, Craig street near Fifth avenue, tomorrow evening. Mr. Crosby, the author of "Swords and Plowshares" and "Plain Talk in Parable and Psalm," served as judge of the Court of First Instance (an international court) at Cairo, Egypt, to which he had been nominated by the late President Harrison. He succeeded President Roosevelt to the legislature of New York. He is the foremost exponent of the Tolstoi idea in America and enjoys the personal acquaintance of the great Russian nobleman. Mr. Crosby is a man of versatile genius and has proved himself a satirist of the keenest quality.

Mr. Crosby was secured for the lecture by a few philanthropic men of this city who are interested in the dissemination of economic truth as applied to the proper solution of the problems confronting this growing city.

Council Elected a Mayor.

STEUBENVILLE, O., Feb. 7.—(Special.)—At a special meeting of Mingo Junction council tonight C. W. Dean resigned as mayor, and Frank S. Buchanan, a veteran of the Civil war, was elected mayor.

WHAT TWO CENTS WILL PROVE

Rev. Rush, one of the best known clergymen in Montgomery County, O., writes:

"For the first time in my life I give a medical testimonial. After thorough trials, I find Pretzinger's Catarrh Balm all, and even more, than is claimed for it. It is the only remedy myself and family have found that does all and more than it promises. I tender this unsolicited testimonial out of a sense of duty to the suffering."

Fraternally and truly,
(Rev.) H. Y. Rush, Dayton, Ohio.

"Cured me of catarrh, restored my voice and hearing, after being afflicted for 15 years." Mrs. J. C. Manock, Tulare, California.

A two-cent stamp sent to Pretzinger Bros., Chemists, Dayton, O., for a sample or 50c for a full-sized jar will prove that Pretzinger's Catarrh Balm cures, when every other medicine or treatment fails. For sale by druggists.

STATUE FUNCTION WILL GO OVER FOR A TIME

Emperor William's Gift to Be Withheld Until a More Auspicious Occasion.

[SPECIAL TELEGRAM TO THE GAZETTE.]

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7.—Despite the fact that an apparently authorized report emanated from Berlin several days ago that Emperor William would send a statue of Frederick the Great to the United States as a gift, about June 1, and that a commission, headed by Count Waldersee would leave for the United States about that time, it is understood here that Baron Speck von Sternberg, the new German ambassador here, is not impressed with the advisability of fixing the ceremony for such an early date. It is expected that Baron von Sternberg will suggest that the international exchange of courtesies be deferred until a time when the feeling in this country growing out of the Venezuelan episode, that Germany is not especially friendly to the United States, is dissipated. One of the emperor's reasons for sending the Baron Speck to the United States was that he thought he would be better able than the recently recalled Ambassador Herr von Holleben to render more cordial and intimate the relations between the two countries.

The report from Berlin was, it is understood, a "feeler" given out by the Berlin government in order that the state of public feeling in the United States might be gauged, and the emperor could decide whether or not June will be a propitious time to send the statue. There are few people here who think so.

SOME GOOD LECTURES.

Sabbath School Associations Have Speakers Booked.

The State and County Sabbath School associations have arranged three lectures to be given here by good speakers, the first one to be delivered tomorrow evening in the North Avenue M. E. church, Allegheny, on "The Training of the Teacher," by H. H. Hamill, D. D., of Nashville, Tenn. He is the superintendent of the teacher training of the Methodist church, south, and was for years field secretary of the great international work.

The other lectures will be delivered as follows: March 9, East Liberty Presbyterian church, by William Byron Forbush, Ph. D., Boston, Mass., "The Heart of a Boy;" March 30, First Presbyterian church, by the Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D. D., New York city, "Soul Winning." Everybody is invited. Admission is free, but a silver offering will be taken.

INDEPENDENTS PLAN TO FIGHT BELL CO.

CLEVELAND, Feb. 7.—(Special.)—The independent telephone managers of Ohio have been in session here for several days organizing to fight the Bell people along the lines of the monopoly. The meeting resulted in the organization of the Independent Telephone Traffic Company, with $10,000 capital, to protect the interests of independent companies. W. G. Thompson of Lebanon was made president.

POSTMASTER GENERAL ENTERTAINS PRESIDENT

Number of Official Dinners Given by Cabinet Officers and Others.

THE PITTSBURGH GAZETTE BUREAU,
Room 10, Postal Building.
WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 7.

The postmaster general and Mrs. Henry C. Payne entertained at a cabinet dinner tonight, with the president and Mrs. Roosevelt as guests of honor. The company, including 24 persons, assembled in the east parlors of the Arlington hotel. Mrs. Payne received her guests in a Paris gown of gray satin, brocaded in pink and blue. With this she wore ornaments of turquoise and pearls.

Mrs. W. S. Cameron, Mr. Payne's sister, who assisted the hostess, wore a gown of white satin brocaded in pink, with diamonds. Miss Louise Jones, Mrs. Payne's niece, wore black lace over white silk.

The company consisted of the president and Mrs. Roosevelt, Secretary of State Hay, the secretary of the treasury and Mrs. Shaw, the attorney general and Mrs. Knox, Secretary of Agriculture Wilson and Miss Wilson, Senator Frye, Senator and Mrs. O. H. Platt, Senator and Mrs. Hale, Senator and Mrs. Hanna, Senator and Mrs. Lodge, Senator Spooner, Mrs. Garrett A. Hobart, Former Postmaster General and Mrs. Charles Emory Smith.

Chief of Engineers and Mrs. Gillespie gave a dinner tonight complimentary to Mrs. McClellan, widow of Gen. George B. McClellan.

Senator and Mrs. Foraker gave a dinner tonight at their residence in Sixteenth street. Among their guests were the Italian ambassador and Signora Mayor Des Planches, the Belgian minister and Baroness Moncheur, the Portuguese minister, Senator and Mrs. Russell Alger and Former Secretary and Mrs. John W. Foster.

Senator and Mrs. Fairbanks gave a dinner tonight complimentary to the British ambassador and Lady Herbert.

Montreal Strike Is Settled.

MONTREAL, Feb. 7.—The street railway strike was settled this afternoon at a conference between strike leaders, representatives of the street railway company and members of the civic committee. The strike leaders accepted the offer made by the company to give the men an increase of 10 per cent in wages and to permit the organization of a union.

Will Recount Lorimer's Vote.

CHICAGO, Feb. 7.—A recount of the votes in the Sixth congressional district was ordered today by the election commissioners in the contest brought by Allan C. Durborrow, Democrat, against Congressman William Lorimer.

Hackett, Pa., January 23d, 1903.

Dr. Henry F. Garey's Ophthalmic Oscillator,

Dear Sir:—We one and all extend our heartfelt thanks to you for giving vision to our fellow brother, "Andrew Peabody," who, having been led to your office on December 17, 1902, in a blind condition, and had been so for nearly one year and after your month's treatment sight was restored unto Him. And had it not been for your treatment he might have gone through a life of darkness.

With gratitude we herewith affix our signatures and seal of Lodge.

WIDOW OF FRENCH CONSUL IS GIVEN MEDAL OF HONOR

PARIS, Feb. 7.—(Copyright.)—The grand chancellor of the Legion of Honor set an example of old-time courtesy in presenting a decoration to Mme. Carlier, the widow of the French consul, for courageous actions in the Armenian troubles. Gen. Florentin received Mme. Carlier in full uniform at a special audience at the palace of the legion, and after greeting her proceeded to fasten the cross on Mme. Carlier's corsage. Unable to succeed, he apologized, and Mme. Carlier herself fastened on the decoration. According to custom, Gen. Florentin should have embraced the recipient, but he gallantly kissed her hand, and, escorting her to the door, expressed his regret that he was unable to order the soldiers to present arms.

OHIO POLITICS ON LINCOLN DAY

Birthday of Nation's Martyr Selected for Arranging Political Plans.

NOTABLE GATHERINGS

[SPECIAL TELEGRAM TO THE GAZETTE.]

COLUMBUS, Feb. 7.—Thursday will be a big day for the politicians of Columbus and Ohio. Gov. Nash remarked the other day, in deploring the way in which Lincoln Day is celebrated, that the anniversary has degenerated into a convenient date for political pow-wows. That is the way the leaders of each party are going to celebrate the day in Columbus this year.

The great event of Lincoln Day will be the dollar dinner, to be given under the auspices of the Jefferson-Jackson-Lincoln league, of which the Hon. John J. Lentz is president, general manager and sole proprietor. The speeches which follow the plain people's banquet at the Columbus auditorium promise enough excitement to keep Ohio agog for some time.

William J. Bryan is coming all the way from Nebraska to deliver the address of the evening, in response to an urgent invitation from his friend, Mr. Lentz. Mr. Bryan will disappoint the faithful if he does not declare war upon that element of the Democracy which stands for the reorganization of the party and the harking back to first principles. He is expected to whoop things up for the radical wing, and there are a few of the members of the league so optimistic as to hope that he will announce his willingness to be the standard-bearer of his party in another national campaign.

Johnson's Future.

Two other men are expected to announce their candidacy for re-election to office on this eventful evening. Tom L. Johnson of Cleveland will be here, and there is a lurking suspicion in the hearts of many good Democrats that he will seize the opportunity to make the long-delayed announcement of his supposed candidacy for the Democratic nomination for the governorship.

If he fails to make known his wishes in this regard, it is thought that he at least will express a willingness to be re-elected mayor of Cleveland. A triumphant re-election at the hands of his fellow citizens, he believes, would further his aspirations for next fall.

Honest John Hinkle, mayor of Columbus, also will tell his fellow-leaguers that he is willing to bear the brunt of battle once more. Wily newspaper men already have wormed his secret out of him and published it at length in their respective papers, but Mr. Hinkle has steadfastly refused to make the formal announcement of his candidacy. He will do so Thursday evening, unless an attack of stage fright seizes him when he rises to make his speech. Mr. Hinkle, using the backs of cards advertising his particular kind of soap, as the medium of his announcement, already has signified his willingness to be elected president, but it is believed that he will content himself with the mayoralty for two years more.

That he is not unmindful of the dignity and importance of the humbler office is shown by an anecdote of his recent experiences in Boston, whither he went, with other trustees of the Columbus Public library, to gain knowledge of the style of the Boston library building. One day the mayor entered a Boston restaurant and sat down at a table. Two other members of his party were in the room, and they watched him in silence.

Momentous Announcement.

"He lingered at the table longer than either of us thought was necessary," said one of them the other day. "Presently he beckoned to the waitress, and, with swelling front, told her something apparently of the greatest importance. We waited until the mayor had gone and then asked the girl what he had said.

"He told me," said the waitress, with a smile, "that he was the mayor of Columbus, Ohio."

These two candidacies, to be launched formally at the coming dollar dinner, will receive, it is thought, the unqualified support of Mr. Bryan. The toast which will be assigned the speaker of the evening will be "Abraham Lincoln."

Among the other speakers will be Charles S. Darrow of Chicago, former law partner of the late John Peter Altgeld, who has acted as John Mitchell's attorney before the commission appointed to investigate conditions in the coal fields and the cause of the great anthracite strike. William R. Hearst, editor and congressman, has sent his regrets and no positive assurances that they will be present have been received from Senators Teller and Pettigrew.

While all this oratory is thundering at the Columbus auditorium the State League of Republican clubs will be dining at the Hartman hotel. The banquet promises to be somewhat of a disappointment in that it is probable that neither Senator Foraker nor Senator Hanna will be able to be present. The day is the anniversary of the death of Gov. Nash's little daughter many years ago, and he has declined the invitation to attend the banquet.

Herrick Will Loom Up.

The speakers of the evening will be the numerous candidates for the Republican nomination for the governorship. Col. Myron T. Herrick of Cleveland, Senator Warren G. Harding of Marion, Hon. Albert Douglas of Chillicothe, Hon. A. I. Vorys of Lancaster, Hon. Robert M. Nevin of Dayton and several others will be on hand ready to speak if called upon.

The banquet is of especial importance this year in view of the proximity of the Republican state convention, which, it is said, will be held in April. The occasion will be one of numerous conferences, and, when the banquet is over, it probably will be safe to predict without reservation who will be the nominee. Col. Herrick will have headquarters at the Nell house, the most historic political gathering-place in Ohio, while his friend Tom Johnson will be quartered at the Park hotel.

Politicians here place much credence in the report from Washington to the effect that John K. Richards, solicitor general of the United States, is the president's choice for the place on the United States circuit bench, to be vacated by Judge William R. Day.

In a personal letter to an intimate friend in this city, a man who stands close to President Roosevelt states positively that the position has already been tendered to Mr. Richards, and that it has been accepted. In the same letter, the name of the writer of which it withheld for obvious reasons, it is set forth that Justice Shiras of the supreme court, whom Judge Day is to succeed, will not retire from his present position until after the passage of the bill to increase the salary of a supreme court justice from $10,000 to $12,000 a year. Justices are retired on full pay.

If it is true that the appointment will go to Mr. Richards, one of the active candidates for the Ohio governorship will be removed from the field.

PITCAIRN HAS THE ONLY WOMAN CANDIDATE IN ALLEGHENY COUNTY

Mrs. Lizzie E. Garman of Pitcairn will be the only woman candidate for a borough office in Allegheny county at the election on Tuesday, February 17. Mrs. Garman is the Citizens party candidate for school director in Pitcairn and she says she will be elected by the largest majority ever given a political candidate for office in the borough. Mrs. Garman is the wife of Albert Garman, an insurance agent. She is a woman of striking appearance. Six years of her life was spent as a teacher in the public schools and Mrs. Garman's claim for election is based on that experience, as, she says, she knows what is required for the best interests of the schools. In no sense is she a "new woman" and the placing of her name before the voters of the borough for the office of school director was against her wishes, but her friends and neighbors insisted that she be a candidate and she finally consented and entered the primaries against a half dozen men and was given an overwhelming vote. Her running mate on the Citizens ticket is H. J. Bredlinger, employed as an inspector in the Pennsylvania railroad yards. On the Republican ticket she is opposed by Walter Bell and S. E. Jones, both strong men.

HALL TO REPLACE CHAIRMAN CREASY

Ridgway Senator Is Favored as Democratic State Manager.

HE HAS NO OPPOSITION

Bucks County Republicans Will Soon Elect Delegates to National Convention Who Will Represent Roosevelt Sentiment

THE PITTSBURGH GAZETTE BUREAU, HARRISBURG, Feb. 7.

Senator J. K. P. Hall of Ridgway has been agreed upon by his party colleagues in the senate and house for chairman of the Democratic state committee to succeed Representative William T. Creasy of Catawissa, who will retire at the annual meeting in this city on April 15.

Hall is the choice of National Committeeman Guffey and other party leaders, and the prospects are there will be no opposition to him, although ex-Judge Gordon of Philadelphia is not friendly to his candidacy. If elected, Hall will retain headquarters in Harrisburg and reappoint ex-Senator P. Gray Meek of Bellefonte as secretary, and Col. James A. Sweeney of Hazleton as sergeant-at-arms.

The Berks county Republicans still adhere to the old rule of electing national delegates a year in advance of the national convention. The election will be held in July, and there is every reason to believe that the delegates will be instructed for President Roosevelt. The leading aspirants for delegates are Jonathan S. Lelrbach, who was a delegate to the last convention, and W. Kerper Stevens, who has been indorsed by the Berks County Bar association for the vacancy in the superior court, created by the resignation of Judge William W. Porter of Philadelphia.

Ex-Representative J. Verner Clark of Washington has entered the contest for the nomination for state treasurer by the next Republican state convention. Mr. Clark is a protege of Congressman Acheson, who is urging his candidacy, and his friends here predict that he will come to the convention with the bulk of the delegates from Western Pennsylvania. Auditor General Hardenbergh, who has been indorsed by the Wayne county Republicans, and ex-Representative Levi M. Morrison of Mercer are also candidates.

William H. Jones of Monongahela City, formerly messenger in the state treasury, has been promoted to a clerkship, in place of George W. Daugherty of Waynesburg, who will be retained as messenger. Mr. Jones is the only colored man holding a clerkship in the public departments in this city.

COME OUT OF COLLEGE LIVING IN SEA OF MIST

Prof. Dewey Says Students Are Unfitted for Rigorous Application to Business.

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS TO THE GAZETTE.]

ANN ARBOR, MICH., Feb. 7.—With this morning's session the convention of educators and business men, which has been in session three days, came to a close. Prof. Dewey of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, deplored the lack of fitness shown by college graduates for the hard realities of life.

"Men come out into the world living in a mist," he said. "They find their college course has unfitted them for rigorous application to business."

Prof. Ripley of Harvard university urged the enforcement of business methods, of exacting attention to study, all through a university student's course.

"It is not so much what we teach the student as how we make him learn it that counts," he said. "Classics are as good as political economy, but best of all is the engineering course, with its mathematics, involving much the same application as does real business."

Regent Arthur Hill of the University of Michigan attacked the tendency to make post-graduate work out of commercial studies, and declared: "A man preparing for business must get to work early, not be kept in college until his eyes are used up."

STORK AT THE WHITNEYS.

Congratulations Being Received Upon the Birth of Daughter on Tuesday.

NEW YORK, Feb. 7.—(Special.)—Congratulations are being received by Mr. and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, to whom a daughter was born Thursday afternoon. Mr. Whitney is the son of William C. Whitney, former secretary of the navy, and his wife was Miss Helen Hay, daughter of the secretary of state.

Mrs. John Hay has made several visits to her daughter in anticipation of the event, and is now at the home of the Whitneys, 11 East Sixty-first street. Mr. and Mrs. Whitney were married February 6 last year, and spent their honeymoon on the estate of Mr. Whitney's uncle, Col. O. H. Payne, at Thomasville, Ga.

Mrs. Whitney, as well as her sister Alice, who married James W. Wadsworth, Jr., were leaders of the younger set in Washington society, and extremely popular there. Miss Hay was a close friend of Miss Alice Roosevelt and was seen at the White House constantly, while the two often went driving together.

ALL IN FAVOR OF INCREASED NAVY

Change of Sentiment in Lower House Produces Excellent Results.

NEED IS RECOGNIZED

Increase in the naval establishment of the United States, so far as possible carrying out a coherent and continuous policy, has been won in the fifty-seventh congress, entirely outside of political lines and entirely without respect to locality. The west has vied with the east, the south with the north and the interior with the coast in the efforts of its statesmen to build up a navy commensurate with the needs of the country.

Thus the present situation marks an entirely new epoch in building up the naval defense. In almost all former congresses there has been a disposition among senators and representatives of those states which have little or no coast line, to curtail the naval expenses. A change in this has been brought about first, by feelings of patriotism, and second, by a firm belief that a strong naval defense means protection for commerce and that protection for commerce means its increase, which applies to one part of the country quite as much as to another.

Nothing has done more to shape sentiment in favor of adding to the ships of the fighting line than the arguments from time to time put forth by the retired rear admirals.

Work of Sub-Committee.

The sub-committee of the house committee on naval affairs, whose special duty has been to draw up the provisions of the annual bill providing for increase in the naval establishment, is entitled to the greatest credit for working for and including in the bill four fighting ships of the largest type. Three of these are battleships of 16,000 tons, and the battleship, it has been shown, time after time, constitutes now, and will in the future, the basis of the navy.

The sentiment in the house in general is in favor of the committee's bill, and it will go through without material amendment. No opposition has developed among the members who have constitutionally opposed large appropriation bills and who have been rarely in favor of adding as many as four fighting ships at each session of a congress.

When the present bill passes, the fifty-seventh congress will have provided for a larger increase in the navy than any other congress in times of peace. The other congress approaching this record was the fifty-fifth, known as the Spanish war congress, and even in that congress nothing was done at the short session for an increase of the navy to compare with the present bill. Secretary Moody, who has been considering the bill as framed by the house today, is eminently pleased with its provisions.

Secretary Moody Pleased.

"This is the best bill, in my opinion, that has been framed at any session of congress with which I have had any dealings," said the secretary tonight. "It provides not only for a substantial increase in ships, but it meets another great need of the navy department by providing for a commensurate increase in the personnel."

All officers of the navy are particularly pleased with the present bill, because it has been drawn almost precisely along the line of the department's recommendations.

With the house evidently disposed to pass the bill as it comes from the committee, attention now turns to the senate, which in the past has always been the final arbiter on matters of appropriations for the navy. No members of the senate naval committee at the present time will say more than that the bill appears to meet the demands of the country, and is a wise and practical measure.

MINERS WORKING FOR 8-HOUR BILL

Prospect That It Will Be Passed by the Current Legislature.

TO PROTECT UNION MEN

Right to Form Organizations Without Prejudice the Object of the Measure Introduced by Reed of Schuylkill.

THE PITTSBURGH GAZETTE BUREAU, HARRISBURG, Feb. 7.

Efforts are being made by President John Mitchell and other leaders of the United Mine Workers to secure the early passage of the Garner eight-hour bill, pending in the house of representatives. The measure embodies the essential features of the legislation for which the miners of Pennsylvania have been clamoring since the very inception of labor organization.

At ever session of the legislature in recent years bills making eight hours a legal day's work in the mining districts of the state have been presented, but all of these have failed. Representative Garner of Schuylkill has drafted a bill which President Mitchell and other mine leaders believe is constitutional and is satisfactory to both the anthracite and bituminous miners.

The joint convention of three anthracite districts of the United Mine Workers last October to declare off the coal strike took up this matter and decided to make it the vital issue of the miners before the present legislature. The Garner bill, which is the outcome of this movement, is simply a method of police supervision of the miners of this state. On its face it interferes in no way with the right of adults to contract their labor for as long and as often as they may like.

To do this would at once bring it in opposition to the state constitution wherein it is provided "that no law shall be passed abridging the right of private contract," so that the bill would necessarily be void and of no effect. The Garner bill gets around the constitution in an ingenious manner.

An Ingenious Way Around.

In all coal mines a large part of the employes are boys ranging from 12 to 18 years old. They comprise breaker boys, chute boys, door tenders and multifarious other and necessary branches of the coal mining industry without which a breaker and colliery would be unable to operate. Mr. Garner has made his bill to prohibit the employment of any minor child under the age of 21 years in or around any coal mine or colliery for more than eight hours per day.

The result of this bill, if it becomes a law, will be to prevent all these necessary breaker boys, chute boys, door tenders, etc., from working more than the legal eight hours per day, which would mean the closing down of the colliery and the legal eight-hour day for men and boys alike, which, he claims, has been one of the great desires of organized labor.

The desire of organized labor for the enactment of such a law is shown by the insignia of the various institutions, their pamphlets, their stationery and all the belongings of such bodies. Beginning with their badges and going down through their whole list of belongings is their seal of office on each and all is inscribed the magic words "eight hours" with the clasped hands of unionism.

Not only have the United Mine Workers always adopted these vital signs of their desires, but away back in the days of the Workingmen's Benevolent association, the Knights of Labor and the time of old John Siney, the great labor advocate, these have been their mottoes and now the final fight is to be made for its incorporation into a law.

Many Favor the Bill.

The Garner bill has been brought out of the house mines and mining committee and is awaiting second reading. Mr. Garner will not call it up until the leaders of the United Mine Workers are through with their work in connection with the investigation by the coal strike commission. As soon as the investigation closes the headquarters of the mine workers will be moved to Harrisburg and a systematic canvass will be made of the legislature in favor of the bill.

The senators and representatives from the anthracite districts have formed an organization for the passage of this measure and other legislation in the interest of the miners. President Mitchell may come to Harrisburg during the session. If he does a resolution will be offered in the house to allow him the use of the chamber for the discussion of legislation advocated by the miners.

Organized labor is also interested in the passage of a bill which has been introduced in the house by Representative Reed of Schuylkill to protect the employes of corporations in their right to form, join or belong to labor organizations. Repeated attempts have been made to secure the enactment of such legislation, but all have been futile. The full text of the bill follows:

The Union-Labor Bill.

"That if any officer, agent or employe of any individual, firm, partnership, co-partnership, association and corporation doing business in this commonwealth shall coerce or attempt to coerce any employe of any such individual, firm, partnership, co-partnership, association and corporation by discharging he, she or them, or threatening to discharge he, she or them, from employment of such individual, firm, partnership, co-partnership, association and corporation because of their connection with any lawful labor organization which such employe may have formed, joined or belonged to, or if any officer, agent or employe shall exact from any applicant for employment in such individual, firm, partnership, co-partnership, association and corporation any promise or agreement not to form, join or belong to such lawful labor organization or not to continue a member of such lawful labor organization, or if any such officer, agent or employe shall in any way prevent or endeavor to prevent any employe from forming, joining or belonging to such labor organization or shall interfere or attempt to interfere by any other means whatsoever, direct or indirect, with any employe's free and untrammeled connection with such lawful labor organization, he or they shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction thereof shall be liable to a fine of not more than $2,000 nor less than $1,000 and imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year, or either or both, in the discretion of the court."

PARKHURST A FRIEND.

Now Defends Police Captain Whom He Endeavored to Have Convicted and Sent to Prison.

NEW YORK, Feb. 7.—(Special.)—The Rev. Dr. Parkhurst rallied to the defense of Capt. Schmittberger, who District Attorney Jerome says is unfit to hold the position of police captain, on account of his admissions to the Lexow committee eight years ago.

"I worked hard," said Dr. Parkhurst, "to put Schmittberger in prison. I have followed his movements since the Lexow investigation, and am satisfied that during that time there is nothing in his career that could be brought up against him. He has come to me at times, when it seemed as if the persecutions of his enemies in and out of the police department must conquer over his steadfastness of purpose. Broken hearted and discouraged, he has told me of the obstacles that were being constantly put in his way, and I have urged him to stand firm, telling him that in time he would get the reward that he deserved."

The attack on Capt. Schmittberger was brought on by his application for one of the vacant police inspectorships.

All persons applying now at the offices of Dr. Jonathan Powell will be treated at the same low rate which he has been charging in the past. Understand, it is important to call at once, as the enormous crowds of patients seeking the Bi-Chemic Treatment necessitates a raise in the fee, but if you call now you will be treated at the same low fee which has been charged patients in the past. This is your last chance to be cured at a nominal price.

STOMACH AND KIDNEY TROUBLE.

George Glaab, Benty St., Allegheny, says: "I had been troubled with my stomach for a long time, and, although I consulted other doctors, could get no relief until I went to Dr. Powell's office. At the time of consulting the Bi-Chemic Physicians I was troubled with nauseafot like vomiting nearly all the time, and no appetite, and what little I ate caused pain, bloating and rifting. Had nervous headaches and so dizzy I could hardly walk straight, no energy for business, had no memory and was languid all the time. Pain over region of Kidneys and liver, water scanty and highly colored and bowels constipated. In two weeks' time I began to notice improvement. All these distressing symptoms have disappeared and I am like a new man."

SUFFERED TEN YEARS.

James F. Carberry, 108 Etna St., Salem, O., says: "My trouble began about ten years ago as a result of lead colic from my work. During all that time I doctored altogether with ten different doctors without any decided benefit until I went to Dr. Powell's office. At that time I was suffering severely with my Stomach and from Liver Trouble, with great flatulence, and other distressing symptoms which accompany such troubles, and had been unable to do any work for two months. In two weeks' time under the Bi-Chemic Treatment I began to notice improvement and was back at my work, and am now able to work steadily and am sound in every way."

FEMALE WEAKNESS.

Mrs. Mary Campbell, 1002 Wheeler St., East End, City: "I had been troubled with Indigestion and Female Weakness for twenty years. I doctored with doctors in New York and at home with but little benefit until my attention was called to the wonderful success of Doctor Powell's method of treatment. I had pains in my stomach and bowels and head, with bloating and rifting and belching of gas and sluggish condition of Liver, shortness of breath and dizziness. Pains in the side, also low down over the region of both ovaries. This trouble affected my nervous system, causing great despondency. Under the Bi-Chemic Treatment I began to notice improvement in four weeks and now all these distressing symptoms have left me and I feel like a different person."

EAR DISCHARGE AND NOISES.

Mrs. M. Ries, West End, Pittsburgh, says: "As a result of Catarrh of the Head I had been troubled with loss of hearing, noises in the head and offensive discharge from the ears for about thirty years. I had received treatment from different doctors but with no benefit. I had read so much about Doctor Powell's Treatment and finally concluded to go to his office, as Mr. Wm. Horsfall, 175 Steuben street, with whom I had talked and who had been successfully treated for Asthma recommended the Bi-Chemic Physicians so highly to me. I thought if they were so wonderful in such a bad case of asthma as I knew Mr. Horsfall to be they might be able to treat my ears successfully. In about four weeks I began to notice improvement. The discharge has entirely disappeared, the ears have become healthy and the hearing is returning gradually. Today I heard the clock ticking and I remarked it must be ticking louder than usual. I can also now hear general conversation."

A TERRIBLE SUFFERER.

Mr. Edmund Trapp, Glenfield, Pa.: Mr. Trapp is a prominent farmer with P. O. address at Glenfield. He says: "My trouble began three years ago with Rheumatism, Indigestion and Nervousness. I doctored a great deal with no apparent benefit until I went to Doctor Powell's office. At that time I was so bad that I thought there was no cure for me. I had pains across my stomach and bloating, rifting and belching came on in the afternoon, sometimes in the morning, causing pain and intense misery. Pains in the back over Kidneys, could not lay or straighten up when I got out of bed. My stomach was in such a terrible condition I was afraid to eat, as I suffered so, and it affected my nervous system. My eyes watered and blurred with specks before them, had noises in my ears, and pain all through my head. All these distressing conditions have disappeared and I am like a new man."

STOMACH TROUBLE.

Mr. Harry Bobst, 291 Spring Garden Ave., Allegheny, says: "I had been troubled for about two years with my head and stomach as a result of colds from exposure. I was advised to consult the Bi-Chemic Physicians by friends who had been treated by this system of medicine. At the time I went to Doctor Powell's Office I was suffering from Nervous Dyspepsia, pain in my stomach, bloating up and rifting of gas, dizziness and nausea, with sluggish condition of liver and constipation. Everything that was taken into the stomach produced a miserable feeling, with sickness. I began to notice improvement in one month's treatment, and now all these symptoms have disappeared."

DEAFNESS.

Miss Bessie Gordon, 145 N. Franklin St., Washington, Pa., says: "I had been troubled with my ears for several years, the result of a severe cold. I kept doctoring, but they continued to grow worse. I finally decided to go to Doctor Powell's office, as I read of the cure of deafness of Mr. James Houston, 336 W. Chestnut St., Washington, by the Bi-Chemic Physicians. At that time my trouble had become so bad it amounted to almost total loss of hearing of the left ear and partial deafness of the right ear, with distressing noises. I began to improve from the very first, and desire to recommend the Bi-Chemic Treatment to anyone suffering from ear troubles."

FREE X-RAY EXAMINATION.

Dr. Powell never accepts a case unless he knows to a certainty the cause of the trouble, and this can only be determined by a scientific X-Ray examination. His X-Ray outfit is the most elaborate and complete in this country. By his special Fluoroscopic attachment he is able to examine all parts of the body and find out to an absolute certainty the cause of the patient's affliction. Come and be examined, it is absolutely free. He will not charge you one cent. Come and find out what your trouble is and you will be advised in reference to a cure. It is all free. He asks no compensation.

BI-CHEMIC TREATMENT.

The different tissues of the body are made up of minute cells, and when these cells become disarranged for the lack of proper nutriment, disease is the result. By applying the proper nutriment to the diseased cells, perfect health can be obtained. All diseases, no matter how chronic, can be cured by bringing the cells back to their normal condition. The treatment used by the Bi-Chemic Physicians is not allopathic nor homeopathic. It is a treatment directed at the diseased cells of the body, and such other remedies as each individual case may require.

THOSE LIVING AT A DISTANCE.

Persons living at a distance are requested to write, describing symptoms of their case in detail and literature will be forwarded to them, and advice given free of charge.

JONATHAN POWELL

TRIP PROMISED TO SEA'S DEPTHS

Visitors to Atlantic City the Coming Season May Explore Bottom of Ocean.

CANAL SCHEME AGAIN

THE PITTSBURGH GAZETTE BUREAU,
ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Feb. 7.

If all the schemes for the entertainment of visitors that have been proposed during the past week are put into shape Atlantic City will be a wonder to behold. But every spring brings hundreds of men with schemes but no money to pay the high rents demanded for buildings on the boardwalk, and besides most of them are visionary. These men with schemes pester the life out of local capitalists and they will continue to overrun the town for several weeks to come.

So far only one novelty has been accepted by a local amusement man. This is a clever device which the inventor calls "A thousand leagues under the sea." It was bought by Capt. John Young. The scheme is to build a large elevator of iron and steel and to inclose the cage with very heavy plate glass. This will be brilliantly illuminated and equipped with a submarine searchlight. The car will be lowered to the bottom of the sea at the end of the pier where there is never less than 30 feet of water. The passengers will have the exhilarating sensation of exploring the bottom of the sea.

Canal Scheme Up Again.

The converting of Atlantic City into an American Venice is the dream of a number of property owners and capitalists. It is proposed to do this by digging a canal 150 feet wide from Gardiner Basin, near the inlet, the entire length of the city, cutting it through the meadowland west of Mediterranean avenue. It is figured by the promoters that if they should build the canal it would solve the surface drainage problem and that the city alone could be made to pay a revenue for so using it sufficient to make the scheme pay. One of the needs of the city is wharves where boats could be kept and boathouses built. So valuable is property of this kind in the city that what there is of it is on Gardiner's Basin adjoining the inlet nets, the owners get $200 a foot front in rentals every year. Yachtsmen do not bring their boats here because there is little room in the harbor and that there is nothing in the shape of boathouse facilities. The digging of the canal, of course, would be followed by the building of boathouses and the advent of yachting associations.

"Mayor" to Be Transported.

Rather than be sent to the county almshouse, Prof. Horatio Girardus Walter, mayor of the Boardwalk, has elected to go back to his former home in Maryland. He was to have been sent away this afternoon, but at the last moment it was found that he was too ill to travel and he was removed from the City hospital to a private boarding house, where his expenses will be paid by the city until such times as he is in a fit condition to be sent away. Walters, who is known to everybody who has ever visited Atlantic City, has been an inmate of the hospital for several months. He was given the best of care, and when approaching convalescence he calmly announced that in the future he would devote as much of his time to the hospital as he did the Boardwalk. This appalled the hospital authorities at first, but the condition of the old man is such that he will not bother anybody very long. It was only after the greatest difficulty that a boarding place could be found for him.

Perhaps no person has been missed from the Boardwalk during the winter as Prof. Walters. It has seemed that some part of the Boardwalk was gone and not a day passes but that inquiries are made for him by visitors. There is not a particle of doubt but that he will be back here as soon as warm weather arrives, if he is still alive at that time. He pays for this as his home of homes, and while he seems perfectly willing to go away for a short time he would not be contented if he believed there was no chance of his ever resuming his old sway over the Boardwalk.

Will Have Carnegie Library.

Andrew Carnegie will give Atlantic City $99,000 with which to build a library providing the city will furnish a site and will contribute $6,600 a year for maintenance. This offer was read before a meeting of the trustees of the library last night, and was instantly accepted. As a matter of fact the trustees already have a site, and the city council some time ago agreed to appropriate $8,000 a year for the support of the institution. Some of the trustees talk of asking the philanthropist to increase his offer to $80,000. The building will be located at the corner of Pacific and Illinois avenues.

Look Forward to Lent.

Everybody here is looking forward to the beginning of Lent to end the suspense of the pre-season anxiety. To Atlantic City the Lenten season means much, for with the days of sackcloth and ashes will come the filling of the hotels with fashionable folk from all over the country who, while they do not forget their churchly obligations, they temper them with the delights of early spring at the shore. From Ash Wednesday there will be a constantly increasing crowd until the climax of Easter Sunday, when the hotels will be taxed to their utmost to hold all of the visitors, and the Boardwalk too small to accommodate all who want to join in the greatest Easter parade in the world.

IN HONOR OF POPE PIUS IX.

ROME, Feb. 7.—The requiem mass celebrated today on the occasion of the 25th anniversary of the death of Pope Pius IX. was an unusually striking ceremonial. Cardinal Satolli officiated. The pope, who was surrounded by the members of the sacred college, the pontifical court and the Roman aristocracy, gave the absolution and the apostolic benediction, although he was suffering from a slight cold.

There were many Americans in the overflowing congregation, including among other prelates Dr. Kennedy, rector of the American college, and Bishop Burke of St. Joseph, Mo.

ONE CONTESTANT WOULD BE DOCTOR

PLUCK AND TACT TO WIN

List Divided Between Boys and Girls—Cash Reward for Each Subscription and Watches for Those Getting 50 Subscribers.

WHAT THE OFFER INCLUDES.

1. A chance to have pick of 25 scholarships at leading educational institutions. Total value, $5,548. Still others may be added.

2. Out of each new subscription for the Sunday Gazette for 25 weeks for $1.25, the contestant is given 25 cents.

3. When any contestant has secured 50 subscriptions he or she will be presented with a handsome gold-filled watch.

Interest of the most active kind is displayed by the canvassers who have reported at the educational department of The Gazette. One boy of about 16, whose ambition is to be a physician, has set out to earn the $1,000 scholarship at the Western University of Pennsylvania, which entitles the winner to a full four-year course. He is but one who has set a high mark for himself. Others are equally ambitious.

One of the canvassers says that he has obtained many promises to subscribe, but that most of the subscriptions will not be given until pay day. This suggests the idea that it might be well to see a great many before each pay day, secure their promises, and then collect the money on pay day.

Those who are doing the work all agree upon how much easier it is to secure subscribers to The Sunday Gazette than they had supposed.

To the young people who are entering the educational contest, The Gazette wishes to say, the best beginning will be made by those who start their work at once. The Gazette has made known everywhere the start of this great competition, and there are few people who will not have heard of it when approached by the young people who desire to obtain their subscriptions to the best paper published in Pittsburgh.

Absolutely the Best.

That is a point not to be lost sight of. The Pittsburgh Gazette is overwhelmingly the best Sunday paper that this city has ever produced. Read it carefully yourself, note the superior qualities of its world-wide news service, its unsurpassed reading matter on science, art, poetry, fiction and travel; its women's and children's departments, its illustrations, every feature of the great home paper. Compare these with anything else found anywhere and be convinced for yourself that you have, in approaching people, something well worth their money and that they are making no mistake for themselves when they order The Gazette from you. You must realize that you have an article of real value, and then you will make other people see it that way, too.

Those who are trying to secure new subscriptions to The Gazette have no need to fear that anyone else can appear trying to sell something as valuable as The Gazette. Take the single matter of illustrations, one of the most costly and most attractive features of the great modern Sunday paper. Show the superiority of The Gazette's illustrations in clearness, in artistic finish, in every way when compared with those of similar publications. Call attention to the fun in the comic pages, the great series of weekly descriptions in color drawing of the doings in Coon Hollow, and the other comic pages.

For Financier or Fan.

If the person you are approaching is interested in financial matters, point out the great attention paid by the paper to the stock market; if he is interested in sports, show the pages devoted to sporting matters, whether baseball, football, hockey, basketball, skating, boxing, or any other sport, professional or amateur. If he is interested in real estate, show the unrivaled real estate department. If he is a railroad man, the railroad department of The Gazette covers a wider and more comprehensive field in the railroad world than any other paper. In short, whatever a man is interested in, he can find it reported more fully and more correctly in The Gazette than anywhere else.

This, then, is the first principle of your canvassing. Be convinced of The Gazette's excellence and your conviction will make others see the truth of your belief.

Once you are fully convinced of this, there are four rules which will aid you in making a great deal of progress in your work:

Know Your Business.

1. Know your business from start to finish. Study carefully the circulars The Gazette furnishes you, so that all the rules will be familiar.

2. Be confident and enthusiastic. You have just as good a chance as anyone. It is a matter of hard work and tact alone who wins. There's reward for you in proportion to the amount of work you do.

3. Remember that you are working for an education. If by your hard work at this time you succeed in winning one of the many scholarships offered, the effect will be felt upon your whole life. You will be equipped for work of a higher character and better paid than if without an education.

4. Close your deals shrewdly. Use all the tact you may have in dealing with people. Politeness must be shown if you are to get polite treatment in return.

Stay with the contest from now on to the close. If you have good luck at the start it should continue as interest in the matter grows. Organize your friends into clubs, get your relatives interested, make all the people you can work for you, and your chances will be increased with every subscriber you secure.

As announced some time ago, the various scholarships have been divided into two parts; one set is suitable for young men and one for young women.

LIVELY POLITICIAN DESPITE HIS YEARS

JOHN H. ROMMELL.

One of the foremost figures in the campaign at Glassport, where the local option question is being hotly agitated, is John H. Rommell, or "Old John," as he is familiarly known. Rommell claims the distinction of having named the Greenback Labor party, away back in the '70s. With a number of well-known Pittsburgh politicians he stood sponsor for that party during its infancy, and, according to records in the possession of the secretary, had the honor of christening it. Despite his 70 years, Rommell is one of the most active politicians in the borough and is a candidate on the Republican ticket for justice of the peace. He is employed in the Pittsburgh Gas and Coke works and supports a family. While he was affiliated with the Greenbackers Rommell was a resident of Pittsburgh. He is against the admission of the licensed saloon and uses it as a plank in his platform.

MONTOOTH BOROUGH CITIZENS TO PROTEST

Indignation Meeting Called to Secure Some Kind of a Change.

So dissatisfied are the leading citizens of Montooth borough over the manner in which the borough affairs have been conducted the last two years that an indignation meeting has been called for next Saturday night in the school hall to discuss the affairs of the borough and to take action in regard to the election of officers. The meeting is the result of action by the most prominent citizens of the borough, which is back of Mt. Washington, and every voter in the town has been invited to attend.

In Montooth borough the Republicans have been in power for two years. Many residents are dissatisfied at the form of government which has prevailed and a determined effort will be made to elect an independent ticket at the coming election. The Citizens and Democrats have combined against the Republicans and the former seem to have strong chances of winning. The town gave the Citizens ticket a good majority last fall.

At this spring's election there are four councilmen, a justice of the peace, two school directors and a burgess to be chosen. One of the leading residents said:

"The town has been so poorly governed the last few years that we must have a change. Our taxation is now 22½ mills, which is much greater than that of Pittsburgh, and we have absolutely nothing to show for the expenditure of the borough's money. A resident who owns a three-roomed house in the borough had a bill for $16.80 taxes for the year.

"We have had no improvements in two years and never get any. Instead of paying off the town's indebtedness we are getting deeper in debt. At the last council meeting several bills were presented which could not be paid on account of no funds."

Among those who have called the meeting are: John Hahn, Frank Lier, C. A. Hepting, C. E. Mowery, George Wolf and James Lewis. These men will all make addresses.

SENATOR TELLER USES PLAIN TALK

FIGHT ON STATEHOOD

Rumors of Compromise Continue to Circulate About the Capitol. Democrats Will Not Agree to Modify Their Demands.

THE PITTSBURGH GAZETTE BUREAU,
Room 10, Postal Building.
WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 7.

"The report of the committee on territories and the statements made on this floor about Arizona and New Mexico are libelous and slanderous. The people of these territories are better than 90 per cent of the immigrants that you are admitting to this country and to citizenship every year," said Senator Teller today in the debate on the statehood bill. "The real basis of the opposition to admitting these territories," said he, "is that the east is afraid that the west is becoming too powerful. It is the old feeling of the east against the west. You say that you hesitate to admit these territories because each of them will send two members to this senate and a representative to the house. This in the face of the fact that there are six New England states with a combined population of less than either New York or Pennsylvania, and yet each of them send two senators to this body."

Senator Teller thus voiced in plain words a thought that has been strongly hinted at many times during the debate on the statehood bill. It is a fact that with the exception of Senator Gallinger of New Hampshire all the New England members are arrayed against the bill. The power of the eastern members in the senate is indisputable and none appreciate it more than the western men. Senators Hale, Aldrich, Platt of Connecticut, Lodge, Proctor and Hanna have things largely their own way in the affairs of the senate, which gives point to the plain words uttered by Senator Teller today.

Mr. Teller made a speech eulogistic of the people of the territories and said that he had no fear from the Mormons in these territories. He declared that the Mormon question had been injected into the debate for the express purpose of killing time for filibustering purposes and said that he did not intend to assist in those tactics by going into discussion of the matter.

Still Talk Compromise.

It is reported tonight that a compromise has been agreed upon and that a statehood bill will be passed by the Republicans early next week. The plan is said to be the one previously suggested by which Oklahoma will be admitted as one state and New Mexico and Arizona as another. The Democrats will not agree to this arrangement, for the reason that both the new states would be safely Republican, and neither would send a Democrat to the senate. But the plan is said to be for taking up such a bill as soon as the District of Columbia appropriation bill is out of the way. This latter measure was reported to the senate today, and Mr. Allison gave notice that he would ask for its consideration on Monday. Consequently by Tuesday or Wednesday it will be known whether the compromise project has succeeded.

Bridge Bill Goes Through.

On motion of Senator Quay the bill granting the Eastern railroad the right to build a bridge across the Monongahela river at Hazelwood was taken up and passed.

Visitors from Oil City.

State Representative George W. Magee and Dr. Barr of Oil City were here today and called upon Senators Quay and Penrose.

L. W. STRAYER.

PRITCHETT TO BE HERE.

Graduates of the Boston Tech to Entertain Their President.

Dr. H. S. Pritchett, president of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, will be the guest of the former students of the institution here on the 17th and 18th of the month. There are nearly 150 alumni of the "Boston Tech" employed at various kinds of work in this vicinity.

Dr. Pritchett as the head of the largest, strictly technical institution in this country, is especially interested in the great industrial center of which Pittsburgh is the head and front. His reputation as professor of mathematics in Washington university, St. Louis, a voluminous writer on astronomical and geodetic topics, head of the United States coast and geodetic survey and chairman of the board of awards of the Pan-American exposition at Buffalo has made him well known. On the evening of the eighteenth, a formal dinner will be tendered Dr. Pritchett by the Pittsburgh association.

Meteor Visits Gotham.

NEW YORK, Feb. 7.—Many persons in different parts of the city whose view was unobstructed by high buildings were startled last night by a meteor, which burst into a flame immediately over their heads and sped swiftly toward the south.

Higher Coal Rates to Be Fixed At Railway Meeting Held Tuesday

At the annual meeting of the Western Pennsylvania and Eastern Ohio Railway Traffic association in this city on Tuesday rates on coal westbound are expected to be raised to accord with the increases in freight rates made by railroads generally on other commodities.

How much this increase will be cannot be told until the association has completed its work. Both all-rail and rail-and-lake rates will be taken up, and all classes of coal will come under consideration. The new rates will go into effect on April 1, the beginning of the coal year. It was on account of coal contracts being made to expire at that time that the increased coal rates were not put into effect with the other commodity increases on January 1.

To this association belongs nearly all the important lines in the Western Pennsylvania and Eastern Ohio coal regions. This includes the Pennsylvania railroad and lines west of Pittsburgh; the Baltimore & Ohio, Pittsburgh & Western and Cleveland, Lorain & Wheeling; the Erie, Lake Shore, Pittsburgh & Lake Erie and Wheeling & Lake Erie. About 25 of the principal executive and traffic officials of the interested lines will be present. The officers of the association are James McCrea, chairman, and George M. Merritt, secretary.

OVER 2,000 WANT JOBS.

Many Would Follow the Wabash Flag When It Enters Pittsburgh.

Pittsburgh and St. Louis officials of the Wabash railroad and its constituent lines are in receipt of over 2,000 applications for positions on the Pittsburgh extension. The applications come not only from this immediate district, but from all other parts of the country. The applicants seek positions ranging from important superintendencies and traffic and engineering places, to the simplest clerical work. In addition, from the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie, the Baltimore & Ohio and the Pennsylvania lines, both east and west, have come applications from trainmen, conductors, brakemen, flagmen, engineers and firemen, while yardmen of every sort are likewise eager to "follow the flag."

Among these applications are some that will certainly be granted, because of the high grade of service their makers can grant. In the list are names of men who are among the best-known in the general offices of all three of the Pittsburgh lines, who for one reason or another wish to join the Gould contingent in the railroad race.

As fast as received, these applications are filed for reference when the company is ready to take up its operations. The Wabash has a strict system of civil service, and it is more than probable that men from its own lines, who have demonstrated their worth and capacity, will be given preference on the new lines, but there will be some positions local men can best fill. Several hundred places will need occupants when the line opens.

B. & O. to Renew Franchise Fight.

The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company is expected to start to push vigorously again its ordinances in Pittsburgh councils after the coming election. These ordinances provide for the new passenger and freight stations, both far more convenient and useful than the present ones. In addition, it is said that the company contemplates asking formally for the right to build an elevated structure down the Monongahela wharf and will show plans which it claims will prevent all obstruction to river traffic. The purpose of the project is to reach the warehouses of the Pennsylvania at the Point and to cross the Allegheny river to connect with the Pittsburgh & Western tracks.

Improvements at Pitcairn.

The Pennsylvania railroad will start work March 1 on a big new car-house for company's materials at the Pitcairn yards. The structure will be about 175x100 feet in size. The new paint shop, which has been under construction for some time, will be completed in about a month. Additions are to be made to the blacksmith shop, and other yard shops. Altogether the improvements planned for Pitcairn during the present year will cost about $500,000. In 1904, however, the present year's betterments to that important transfer point will be far eclipsed. The whole is to be overhauled and the capacity greatly increased.

Vacation for E. T. Horn.

E. T. Horn, assistant general superintendent of the Pittsburgh grand division of the Baltimore & Ohio, left last evening on a 30-day trip to the south. Mr. Horn's work here has been particularly trying in the last few months since his appointment to the Pittsburgh position. His duties relate to the organization and management of terminals, the most difficult portion of the railroad operation in and about Pittsburgh. The management has insisted upon his taking a rest at the present time, when comparatively little construction can be done, in order that he may be in fit condition to do the best work when the spring opens, and the many improvements in terminals start.

W. E. Lowes as an Author.

W. E. Lowes of the general passenger department of the Baltimore & Ohio, is the author of the leading article in the "Book of the Royal Blue" for the present month. Through his connection with the Baltimore & Ohio he has secured the official correspondence of the railroad company with its employes and the state and federal authorities at the outbreak of the John Brown disturbance at Harpers Ferry initiating the civil war. Mr. Lowes has in this way put together a most interesting story of the affair. The book contains other good features.

RAILROAD NOTES.

W. E. Langdon, traveling passenger agent, and C. H. Leach, city ticket agent of the Erie at Youngstown, were in the city yesterday.

Panhandle train No. 2 will be run through to the east in case of the Chicago limited being late, according to arrangements which have just been completed.

The Rock Island has forced from the Southern Pacific half-ownership of the Houston & Texas Central. The Rock Island will for that reason not build its proposed line to Galveston.

Baltimore & Ohio engineers are surveying for an additional track between Rand and Bruce, four and one-half miles. This is the start of the double-tracking of the entire Wheeling division.

The $12 round trip rate for excursions from Pittsburgh to Boston over the Lake Erie and other Vanderbilt lines is expected to come up at the meeting of the Central Passenger association at Chicago Wednesday.

William L. Martin, who was in Pittsburgh about a week ago and is well-known here, has been promoted from general freight agent to freight traffic manager of the Minneapolis, St. Paul & Sault Ste. Marie, a part of the Canadian Pacific system.

The annual report of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen shows as follows for the year: Lodges organized, 32; net gain in membership, 5,434; total membership, 54,000; amount paid in death and disability claims, $852,000; amount in treasury, $306,000.

L. C. Haas, assistant general manager of the Baltimore & Ohio; E. J. Foley, assistant to the general manager, and I. G. Rawn, general superintendent at Pittsburgh, ended a two-day inspection of conditions at Connellsville yesterday and returned to Pittsburgh last evening.

Bids have been asked, to be opened February 16, for the grading and masonry of part of the proposed double-track low-grade freight line from Sewickley on the Northern Central to Aitken on the main line of the Pennsylvania railroad. The portion between Parkersburg and Columbia is that to be built at once.

Col. J. M. Schoonmaker, vice president of the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie, spent yesterday with officials of the Pittsburgh Steel Company at Monessen, looking over the ground and making preliminary arrangements for the yards which that company will build at Monessen. A large level tract has been secured for the purpose.

General Agent G. G. Herring and Traveling Passenger Agent S. A. Myers are distributing some handsome books illustrative of the Mardi Gras festivities at New Orleans and the Southern Pacific's facilities for handling passengers there. The service of the steamship "Excelsior" from New York for the purpose is especially described.

LACK OF SYMPATHY.

Relation of the Grammar School to the High School Discussed by Educators.

"The Relation of the Grammar School to the High School" was discussed by the Principals' association yesterday afternoon. It was argued that a too decided break in the course of study existed which was detrimental to the pupil and caused a great many to drop out of the high school after the first year. Several suggestions were submitted to overcome this. One was that more of the first year's work in the high school should be taught in the grammar school, and, in like manner, more of the last year's work of the grammar school should be carried into the high school.

Director Edward Rynearson of the high schools said that some teachers in the high school seemed to think they were on a higher plane than the grade teachers, and this spirit was caught up by the pupils, causing a lack of sympathy. He blamed teachers in the lower grades for doing too much of the pupil's work and not compelling them to work independently. He did not favor the custom of holding grammar school commencement exercises and the granting of diplomas. This, he contended, meant for many that their school life was ended.

Miss Emma Craig said she felt there should be a closer bond of sympathy between the grammar and high schools.

C. B. Cook and Superintendent Samuel Andrews were of the opinion that it would be better for some teachers to be given graded schools and work their way into the high schools, as in that way they would learn the theory of good teaching.

Others taking part in the discussion were R. H. Holbrook, J. M. Logan, J. P. Stephens and C. H. Garwood.

Pirates' Owner Opposed To Early Spring Games

Lively Times Ahead in Local Hockey Circles

PIRATES' OWNER FAILS TO APPEAR

BASEBALL GOSSIP

Deacon Phillippe, who is custodian of the key to the office of the Pittsburgh baseball club in the Smith building, is talking seriously of swearing out a search warrant on President Dreyfuss. The leader of the Pirates has been absent now for over six weeks and if he does not put in an appearance pretty soon there is going to be trouble.

Word was sent from Cincinnati, where Dreyfuss has been making his headquarters, that the owner of the champions would leave Portsmouth that night with the intention of dropping off at Pittsburgh for a one-day stay and then proceed on to Philadelphia to gather in his stock on the baseball holdings of Col. John I. Rogers. Deacon Phil thought this a grand, a correct tip and was on hand to act as a reception committee but on arrival, the intended guest failed to appear. Deacon Phil has been keeping track of it and finally tiring out sought home and will await a personal telegram from Barney before venturing near the club office again.

In Cincinnati Mr. Dreyfuss is quoted as saying that he has not heard from the league committee of which he is a member and he has no idea when the joint schedule committee will get together. He is not in favor of a spring series of games between the clubs of the two leagues because they would not be a fair test, as the players would not be in condition to put forth their best efforts. In the interview Mr. Dreyfuss says:

"The Pittsburghs have not made any arrangements to play any and the chances are they will not be seen in Pittsburgh until the Pirates go there to meet Chicago to open the championship season. It would be impossible to play early April games in Chicago, Detroit and Cleveland and the idea of National league teams going to the southern circuit is not practicable. Such games would serve to take the edge off the real championship. That deal for the Billies is in short good shape that it could close within any moment. Not until the deed of transfer is signed, sealed and delivered will the make-up of the new club be divulged."

On Friday afternoon Dreyfuss had a lengthy interview in Cincinnati with Secretary Rickey of the St. Louis American league club, relative to arranging for a few exhibition games between their two teams when the champion teams are on route from Hot Springs to St. Louis. It was decided to play games in St. Louis on April 5 and 7 and 8. President Dreyfuss made the significant remark that he was willing to wager his money that the American league had not secured grounds on Manhattan island. He thought for a while that there was a deal on in such a thing, but I am now thoroughly convinced that there is not a possibility of it and that, in fact, Ban Johnson and the other gentlemen of that league have given up all hope of locating here," said the Pittsburgh magnate. "I think that the American league will locate in the Bronx and that is anything but a desirable spot for a ball club to do business."

REDS NOW COMPLETE.

New College Player Secured Who Has Good Record.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 7.—(Special.)—With the signing by Manager Kelly of Harry Wood, the University of Maryland outfielder, the Cincinnati team is complete for next season. The Reds have all the men that are needed for the team to begin the season. Kelly has been angling for Wood for some time and finally succeeded in inducing him to go in for professional baseball. Wood is reported as a fast man in all respects—a right-hand thrower, a left-hand batter and extremely fast on Bases. Besides possessing ability as a guardian of the outer garden, Wood is said to be a good catcher, so that in case of necessity he can be sent behind the bat. By means that "Billy" Maloney will probably be sold to the Boston American league team.

WILL HOLD DEL.

President Postal Will Not Part With Big Slugger.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7.—Fred C. Postal, president of the Washington baseball club, who arrived here today from Detroit announced positively that Delehanty will be kept with the Washington club and Ryan will be signed again. "I have letters," said Mr. Postal, from six of the eight club managers, offering to take Delehanty off my hands, but I propose to keep him."

President Ban Johnson of the American league will arrive in Washington today and confer over the local baseball situation.

FINE PREMIUM LIST.

Duquesne Kennel Will Give Finest Prizes Ever Offered.

The premium list of the coming bench show of the Duquesne Kennel club, which is to be held in Old City hall on March 5, 6 and 7, is being sent out by Secretary F. S. Stedman. The list is the longest the club has offered since dog shows were held in this city. In addition to the unusual list of cash prizes, the special premiums are more than ordinarily attractive to exhibitors.

Secretary Stedman states that this will be the first show in Pittsburgh at which the first prizes in all classes will be an award of $10 in cash. At former shows in Pittsburgh and in other cities it was customary to offer a cash premium of $5 for a few of the larger breeds, but this is the first attempt to offer a uniform prize in all breeds, large and small, of $10. The seconds are to be $5 each and thirds $3. There will also be the usual list of prizes offered by the Duquesne Kennel club and others interested in dogs.

BY CLOSE MARGIN.

GROVE CITY, PA., Feb. 7.—(Special.)—The University of Pennsylvania basketball team gave the local collegians the warmest battle they have had this season, the locals winning by a score of 27 to 24. The first half ended a 12 to 12 tie, the second half Penn's boys scored seven field goals, while Pennsylvania scored four goals from fouls. Evans tried to use football tactics and had to be warned by the referee a number of times before he quieted down. The line-up and score:

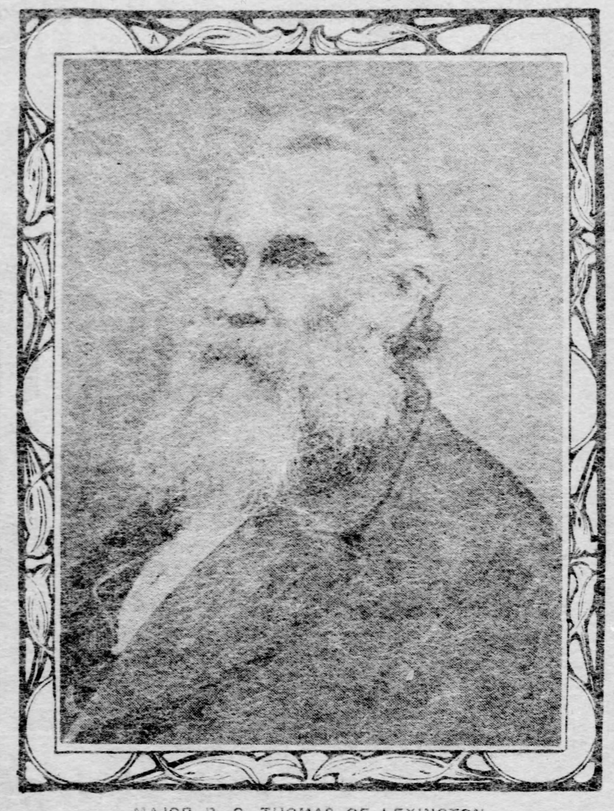
Grove City—27.		Penna.—24.
Hickman	R. F.	Kunkle
Defiance	L. F.	Evans
Cooper	Center	Morse
Hoppes	R. G.	McCruden
Bennett	L. G.	Lawrence

Substitutions—Campbell for Hoppes, Bennett for Hays, Darraugh for McCruden. Goals from field—Hickman 5, Locke, DePrance 4; Campbell, Kunkle 2, Evans, McCruden, Lawrence 2, Bennett 2, Darraugh. Goals from fouls—DePrance, Morse 6. Referee—McClelland, Bennett and Hays. Time—20 minute halves.

THE BOWLING TOURNEY.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Feb. 7.—Entries closed tonight for the American bowling congress tournament which will be held here the week of February 23. There have been received 75 entries of five men teams, 27 individual entries and 40 two men teams, which show that at least 420 men will race the alleys at Pythian hall during tournament week. It is thought by the local managers that a large number of New York entries have been mailed today, and that when these shall be received, the number will be over 500. The prize list will agregate $1,000.

FAMOUS BREEDER OF THOROUGHBREDS.



MAJOR B. G. THOMAS OF LEXINGTON.

WAGNER'S TEAM LOST TO SOUTH SIDE FIVE

Roberts' Team Simply Outplayed the Carnegie Aggregation at Every Turn.

Major League Standing.

	Won.	Lost.	Pct.
South Side	7	2	.778
Manchester	7	3	.715
Carnegie	6	3	.667
Iroquois	3	3	.500
Lyceum	2	6	.250
Bellevue	0	7	.000

After two successive defeats at the hands of the Carnegie basketball team, the South Side five with a sudden brace last night took Wagner's aggregation into camp, 29 to 6. The defeat was a stinging one and the Carnegie team played sadly out of form. The South Siders were in the best possible condition and showed thorough system and snappy play throughout the contest.

Carnegie succeeded in getting but one field goal, and that was thrown in the latter part of the last half. With but three minutes to play, Arehart captured the ball in South Side territory and carried it unassisted to the South Side goal and successfully placed the ball through the basket. The game started shortly after 9 o'clock, with a crowd of almost 2,000 people in attendance. It was one of the largest crowds that ever witnessed a basketball contest in Odd Fellows hall and the enthusiasm knew no bounds.

Pandemonium broke loose at the start of the contest, when the South Side team placed three net goals in the basket in as many minutes. The crowd simply went wild over the quick play, and after the first part of the first half the Carnegie players seemed to lose heart and devoted their efforts to keep the score as low as possible. The South Side team started the game with a system of team play that it was almost impossible for the visitors to break up. They had a way of passing the ball over their opponent's heads that considerably worried Wagner's players and kept them guessing from the first toot of the referee's whistle.

Honus Wagner got into the game early. He secured the ball on several occasions and tossed it the length of the floor. There was no one to receive these passes, however, and the fine plays often resulted in a score for the South Side team. Once Honus tried to shoot a foul goal, but he was as unsuccessful at this as he was at making goals from the field.

Liebau's successful shot for goal from the center of the field in the first half was one of the features of the contest. The flaxen-haired South Sider grabbed the ball from a scrimmage, faced the grand stand and then placed the leather safely in the basket in a pretty throw. Carnegie men tried some of the long throws too, but were unsuccessful. The mix-ups during the game were many and fierce.

Time had to be called for several men to get their bearings, and in the opening of the second half Nickel and Siebel collided, the latter player going to the floor. He had to be carried to the dressing rooms, where he remained unconscious for fully four minutes. At the end of the first half the score stood 17 to 3, in favor of the South Side, and Robert's team did not try to run up the score greatly in the latter half of the contest. Line-up and score:

Liebau	Forward	Flint
Leithead	Forward	Siebel-Frye
Weitzel	Center	Siebel
Winderknecht	Guard	Wagner
Nickel	Guard	Arehart

In the preliminary the Tigers of Allegheny were defeated by the South Side Juniors by the score of 43 to 1. The Juniors played a fine game and deserved such a victory, although the Tigers were somewhat crippled.

CORNELL'S SCHEDULE.

Team Is Booked to Make a Western Trip.

ITHACA, N. Y., Feb. 7.—With the exception of a western trip to include games with Oberlin, Michigan and other western teams, Cornell's baseball schedule was announced today.

The schedule includes the following games: April 4, Naval academy at Annapolis; April 7, Georgetown at Georgetown; April 8, University of Virginia at Charlottesville; April 9, Trinity college at Durham; April 11, Maryland Athletic club at Baltimore; April 13, Philadelphia American league at Philadelphia; May 2, Princeton at Ithaca; May 15, Harvard at Cambridge; May 16, Princeton at Princeton; May 18, University of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia; May 23, Michigan at Ithaca; May 30, Pennsylvania at Ithaca.

Will Send Some Fine Dogs.

SHARON, PA., Feb. 7.—(Special.)—The Trout Island kennels, in which Dr. F. B. Hoyt and F. H. Allerman of this city and E. Horne of Pittsburgh are interested, is preparing to send an exhibit of dogs to the Duquesne kennel show which will be held in Pittsburgh March 4. The kennels will send at least 20 dogs.

YOUNG CORBETT MAY MEET BENNY YANGER

Chicago Boy Will Get a Show but He Must Secure a New Manager.

CHICAGO, Feb. 7.—Young Corbett, featherweight champion of the world, and Bennie Yanger, the little local boxer, had a long and pleasant chat here yesterday afternoon.

The champion and his challenger came together in the apartments of the former at the Great Northern hotel in the afternoon. The greeting on both sides was cordial, each complimenting the other on their appearance and looks.

The talk, general at first, was gingerly and by easy stages broadened into matchmaking. Yanger wanted to fight the champion. He thought he could win from Corbett and told him so. The champion did not flare up and develop tantrums. He said that he was confident that Yanger thought so.

Obdurate and immovable, though, was Corbett on one point. Yanger would have to do his own business in order to get on a match and a chance at the championship. Either this or Yanger would have to get a new manager.

"I will do business with you under no other conditions, Benny," said the champion.

Corbett left for the Pacific coast last night. He will first fight Ned Hanlon, the 'Frisco champion, on February 25. After this he may arrange a battle with Britt, if the latter will agree to make the weight imposed by Corbett.

The evening papers fell into Corbett's hands just before the champion started for his train. These had Corbett and Yanger all but matched.

"Nothing of the sort," fumed Corbett, and then he sat down and dictated the following statement, which he requested be made public:

"Benny Yanger called on me in my rooms at the Great Northern hotel today, and I was glad to see him. Benny is a nice little fellow, and a perfect gentleman. There are very few cities in this country outside of Chicago where Yanger is known, and therefore he is no drawing card outside of Chicago. As to his manager, I consider him a joke. He will never again be allowed to show in Philadelphia. He is on the black list in San Francisco, and everybody here tells me that the gentry was killed in Chicago on his account. I started to do some business with him to appear at the American club, but I did not like his way, and I informed him that never again will I transact business with him.

"I want to state right here that, if Yanger was the only fighter in the world, and if his manager controlled the largest club in the world and would offer me $10,000 for appearing against the Abasha Kid, I'd refuse to do business with him. This is final. YOUNG CORBETT,

"Featherweight Champion."

Ready to Play Hockey.

The H. L. A. C. hockey team, having completed its organization, is now negotiating for the use of Duquesne garden one evening each week, and will arrange games with any of the local amateur sevens. The players of the H. L. A. C. team are requested to report at the club house Tuesday at 7:30 p. m.

NERVOUS PROSTRATION

Nervous Prostration is often the result of neglecting a case of hemorrhoids or piles; the pain and irritation attendant upon this disagreeable trouble inconveniences and annoys one, but it is possible to go to business and to do the ordinary day's work, so the trouble is neglected until the nerves become exhausted and the patient is a victim of nervous prostration.

Hemorrhoids cause a sensation of heat, tension and itching in a region where is located the most sensitive nerves of the human system and the continued irritation will eventually cause a collapse of the nerves. This would easily have been avoided if the patient had carefully treated the case of piles from their first appearance. No other trouble can be so quickly and safely overcome if treated in an early stage; and even if the case is an old one, there is a remedy which will act with remarkable results if faithfully applied.

The Pyramid Pile Cure is in suppository form and can be conveniently applied to the afflicted parts, the soothing oils and medication reaching and healing the enlarged hemorrhoidal veins of the rectum and acting at once upon the inflamed tissues.

Every sufferer from this trouble should send at once to the Pyramid Drug Co., Marshall, Mich., for their book on Piles or Hemorrhoids, which will be sent free. The Pyramid Pile Cure is so well known and the hundreds cured by it have so advertised it that the little book is merely sent to give each patient a clearer idea of his or her particular case and the proper treatment for it.

VICTORIAS WILL PLAY HOUGHTON

Sixsmith's Fast Seven Left Last Night for Michigan.

PLENTY OF ICE SPORT

Manager Sixsmith at the head of the Victoria hockey team of the Western Pennsylvania league, left last night for Houghton, Mich., to play two games with the Portage Lake Hockey club's team, Monday and Tuesday nights. This is the first out-of-town trip any of the local teams has taken this season.

The Houghton bunch is the fastest in the United States and hasn't been defeated, even by Canadian teams, this year. This is the crowd that defeated P. A. C. last winter and two fast games are expected when the Victorias hit the ice tomorrow night and Tuesday.

The Houghton men will play return dates in Pittsburgh the first week in March. During the week Manager A. S. McSwigan closed a contract with the Michigan club. There will be a gala week of hockey when the Portage Lake people come. Victoria and Keystone play on the 3d; P. A. C. and Victorias come together for the last scheduled combat on the 6th. This will make four games for this week, enough for the most enthusiastic hockey fan.

Will Be a Warm Game.

What many people think will be the big hockey game of the year between local teams, will be played Friday night of this week, the contestants being P. A. C. and Victorias, the leaders in the league race. The margin between them is very narrow. Victoria has won five and lost one game, while P. A. C. has won six and lost three. They have one game with the Bankers tied. The money looks to have won four and lost three. They play Keystones, the tailenders, Tuesday night. If they win, as they confidently expect, they will be another notch nearer the Vics and P. A. C. men. The struggle will then settle down to a three-team race for an exciting finish. Manager Stoehner of the Bankers is banking on Charlie Liffiton, his new whirling right wing, and thinks he has a good show for the pennant. Liffiton is certainly a couple hockey stars by his phenomenal work with the stick and his dervish doings on skates.

There will be a meeting of the Western Pennsylvania Hockey league at Duquesne garden Tuesday evening to consider the protest of Manager Charles S. Miller of the P. A. C., made during Friday night's game. Just before the bugle blew Friday night Liffiton was benched. When both teams lined up for an extra 10 minutes' play Liffiton was on the ice. Manager Stebner and other Bankers claimed that as the extra 10 minutes was really the beginning of a new game Liffiton's unexpired bench time had nothing to do with it. Manager Miller claimed the extra 10 minutes was merely a continuation of the game and Liffiton should not be allowed to play until his time was up.

The Other Disputed Game.

The league meeting will also make another attempt to settle the controversy over the Victoria-Bankers game of November 28, caused by both teams claiming Hod Stuart. Two weeks ago J. W. Orth, R. E. Hamilton and C. C. Axill were appointed a committee to hear testimony and decide what should be done. The committee has been unable to get together at the time appointed. Secretary Claude Rahbe of the league has requested them to meet at the Garden Tuesday night for another effort.

The proposed indoor national skating championships, under the auspices of the Amateur Skating association of the United States at Duquesne garden, the last week in February, will be the greatest skating event ever held here. E. J. O'Brien will have charge of the local end of the game, which will be under the direction of a committee of five of the national association. Manager O'Brien has sent entry blanks to all the prominent speed skaters in the country.

There will be at least nine entries from New York and vicinity, among them being Phil Kearney, Morris Wood, who this season has been breaking records of 20 years' standing; Hugh Palliser, Harry McDonald, W. W. Swan, W. L. Smith, Edward Nullegan and Clifford E. Dunn. Joe Donoghue of Newburgh, N. Y., will also be here. The See family will probably be represented. Peter Sinnirud, the terrible Swede, having this year entered the professional class, is barred. Sinirud has written to Manager McSwigan of the Garden asking for exhibition dates, but as Johnny Nilsson will be here all of next week doing fancy "stunts," it is doubtful if the Swede can get time.

Pittsburgher for President.

Charles B. McLean, president of the Lincoln National bank of Pittsburgh has been proposed for national president of the new Amateur Skating association of the United States. At a meeting in the Cleamont rink, New York, when a provisional organization was formed, the following were selected to constitute the board of managers for the first year: H. Buermeyer, New York Athletic club; Charles B. McLean, Pittsburgh; Jerome Karst, St. Louis Athletic association; Clifford E. Dunn, Skating club, Brooklyn; C. C. Preston, Pittsburgh; Thomas T. Hinckley, Cambridge Skating club; A. S. McSwigan, Pittsburgh; Norman F. Heffley, Heffley Athletic association; T. H. Clark, unattached; Charles M. Van Kleck, unattached; Otto Sarony, New York Athletic club; John G. Doughty, unattached.

SHERIFF BELL WON HANDICAP

REDFERN'S BAD FORM

[By Associated Press to The Gazette.]

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 7.—When Sheriff Bell galloped home an easy winner in the Club House handicap today he placed $1,500 to the credit of his owner, M. L. Heyman. Fuller picked the best scoring for him, and when called on, he came away without an effort, winning by four lengths. Paramount was sold today for $1,600 to J. P. Gibbs. Carat was run up to $1,605 and bought in. Ceylon was run up to $1,600 and sold to R. H. Clark. Jerry Hunt was run up to $800 and bought in.

Jockey Redfern, who was hurt yesterday in the fall off Brief, shows but little improvement today. The attending physicians say that he will be about again within a week or 10 days. Star and Garter's fall was due to crowding. Weather rainy and track sloppy. Summaries:

First race, selling, mile—Carat, 115, Battiste, 6 to 1, won; O'Hagan, 98, W. Hicks, 11 to 5, second; The Messenger, 106, Lindsey, 6 to 1, third. Time, 1:48. Sister, Blue Blaze, Perrine and Boundless also ran.

Second race, mile—Hedge, 90, Scully, 7 to 2, won; Floyd K., 107, Fuller, 6 to 1, second; Melbourne Eclipse, 102, Monroe, 5 to 1 third. Time, 1:43 3-5. Burke Cochran, Paramount, Harkelmore, Showman and Laton also ran. Star and Garter fell soon after the start.

Third race, handicap, 6 furlongs—If You Dare, 107, Fuller, 6 to 5, won; Harry New, 100, Robbins, 8 to 5, second; Bummer, 95, Treanor, 7 to 1, third. Time, 1:16. Playlike and Lieber Anton also ran.

Fourth race, Club House handicap, mile—Sheriff Bell, 98, Fuller, 6 to 1, won; Albert F. Dewey, 94, Haack, 8 to 1, second; Emshee, 86, Cannon, 10 to 1, third. Time, 1:44. Scotch Plaid, Hilo, Nitrate, Hargis and Stratton II. also ran.

Fifth race, selling, 1⅛ miles—Ceylon, 110, Gannon, 4 to 1, won; The Way, 100, W. Hicks, 5 to 1, second; Benson Caldwell, 103, Fuller, 3 to 5, third. Time, 2:42 1-5. John Bull and Eros also ran.

Sixth race, selling, 6 furlongs—Jerry Hunt, 107, Donnegan, 3 to 1, won; Miss Shanley, 107, A. Hall, 20 to 1, second; Stuart Young, 103, W. Hicks, 10 to 1, third. Time, 1:17 1-5. Little Jack Horner, Lady Brockway, Kiwasa, Moront, King Barleycorn, Thurles, Alpaca, Crutchfield, Flora Levy ran.

THE BURNS HANDICAP.

It Was Won by Horton, a 25-to-1 Shot.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 7.—A 25-to-1 shot, Horton, the grandson of El Rayo and Fusilladas Last, carrying the colors of Bianchi and McGovern, won the $10,000 Burns handicap at Ingleside today from one of the best fields that ever contested in the event. Cunard of the Morris stable, was second, with Claude, owned by M. J. Daly, next in line. The race was run over a sloppy track and in a heavy rain, but the footing was comparatively firm. Summaries:

First race, 7 furlongs, selling—Mechanus, 97, Shaw, 7 to 10, won; Verbena Daly, 97, Wilson, 25 to 1, second; Harry Thatcher, 107, W. Waldo, 12 to 1, third. Time, 1:29. Bard Burns, Tiberia, Nellie Forest, Cathetto and Florian II. also ran.

Second race, 8½ furlongs, purse—Boxwood, 112, W. Waldo, 2 to 5, won; Bear Catcher, 109, Bullman, 4 to 1, second; Bombadier, 109, J. Daly, 5 to 1, third. Time, :49. St. George Jr., Ravelina and Pinapela also ran.

Third race, 6 furlongs, selling—Sprucis Talbot, 92, L. Wilson, 8 to 5, won; Stuyve, 111, Burns, 2 to 1, second; Constellator, 97, McGovern, 8 to 1, third. Time, 1:16. Carl and Glendenning also ran.

Fourth race, 1⅛ miles, Burns handicap, $10,00 added—Horton, 104, C. Kelly, 25 to 1, won; Cunard, 98, Jenkins, 4 to 1, second; Claude, 96, J. Daly, 25 to 1, third. Time, 2:10½. Novus, Col. Ballyne, Siddons, Antelight, The Prefer, Watercure Eonic, Yellow Tail, St. Sever, Elliott, Lord Badge, Ishtar, Durazzo, Cold Belt and Dupont also ran.

Fifth race, 5½ furlongs, selling—Tower of Candy, 105, Dillon, 3 to 1, won; Ballroom Belle, 90, Connell, 4 to 1, second; Lizzie Rice, 95, W. Waldo, 6 to 1, third. Time, 1:09. Golden Light, Rose of May, Troy and M. F. Tarpey also ran.

Sixth race, mile, selling—Hermercia, 103, Bullman, 3to 1, won; Diderot, 109, Birkenruth, 7 to 10, second; Axminster, 107, Kelly, 8 to 1, third. Time, 1:45. Filibuster, The Phoenician, Searcher and Golden Cottage ran.

MANY RICH STAKES.

Brighton Beach Association Hangs Up Big Purses for the Harness Horses.

NEW YORK, Feb. 7.—C. A. McCully, secretary of the New York Trotting association, made public today the stakes for the grand circuit meeting at Brighton Beach next August. There are five stakes valued at $45,000, the largest amount ever offered at any one meeting for light-harness horses.

The richest prize is the Bonner Memorial for 2:12 trotters, which has a guaranteed value of $20,000, double the amount given for the event last year. The Brighton, for 2:10 pacers, is also increased to twice its amount in 1902, and is now worth $10,000. Three other purses for 2:20 trotters, 2:20 pacers and 2:25 class, open to 4-year-old trotters, are fixed at $5,000 each.

Entries for these five contests close on March 7. Some 15 other classes will be arranged later, bringing the total premium list up to at least $70,000. All these early closing races are on the Brighton Beach plan of sending non-winners to the stable after three heats. The other events probably will be best two in three heats.

EXPECT TO ROW TO NEW ORLEANS

James Brown and William Sloan will leave Homestead in a skiff on April 15 for New Orleans, and expect to reach that city by May 20. The men propose rowing the entire distance, and as both are expert oarsmen, they think they will have no difficulty in rowing the 2,050 miles in 35 days. The feat of rowing to New Orleans from Pittsburgh has never been accomplished, so far as is known.

Another League Doing Well.

The promoters of the Allegheny County Amateur league are very much encouraged by the success that they have had in the past week. Such well-known teams as the Duquesne A. C., Braddock A. C., Glassport A. C., Wilkinsburg A. C., J. C. Littles of McKeesport and Belmar A. C. have entered in the league. A fine trophy has been offered for the championship of this league by a well-known business man. Would like to hear from all first-class 18 to 20-year-old teams, including Rhody Wallaces of Millvale, Turtle Creek and Dollies A. C. Address R. V. McDough, 245 Meadow street, East End.

IRWIN'S LITTLE TALE.

Arthur Talks About Quaker Club and Many of the Star Players.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 7.—(Special.)—Concerning the sale of the Philadelphia National league club to a syndicate of western capitalists, Arthur Irwin has this to say:

"I understand that the purchasers will get the equipment and franchise for $150,000. I managed the club in 1894 and 1895. In the former year we cleared $60,000 and the following season $119,000. During that time only $2,000 was expended for players—$1,000 for Orth and the same amount for Joe Sullivan.

"Col. Rogers doubtless realizes now that he has made a few mistakes. He had Lajoie right in his grasp last season and failed to profit by the situation.

"It's funny about this man Lajoie. When I managed the New York club in 1896 Mr. Freedman could have had Lajoie and Geier for $1,500. He was looking for good, young talent, yet when his attention was called to these two players he turned them down, saying that young fellows could not make good.

"I traded Jack Doyle to Hanlon that year for Gleason and $2,500, so that in any way Freedman was in no position to lose. Look at the team that he had that year; Catchers, Wilson, Warner and Farrell; pitchers, Meekin, Clark, Seymour and Doheny; basemen, Davis, Gleason and Joyce; shortstop, George Dowling; outfield, Van Haltren, Tiernan and Stafford. That club finished third the next year."

McKeesport Five Badly Beaten.

Homestead snowed McKeesport's basketball team under at Homestead last night to the tune of 38 to 18. McKeesport started out well, but could not stick to the pace set by the Homestead boys. After a short time the game degenerated into a farce, and the McKeesport boys played the Alphonse and Gaston act, as to who should toss the ball into the basket. Line up:

EXPERT HANDICAPPING and PRICES furnished to BOOKMAKERS and POOL ROOMS.

We Do Not Have to Pick the Winner.

The principles embodied in our system are exactly the same as those used by percentage Book Makers. Through the best handicappers money will secure, and Track Experts of the same caliber, we eliminate from races upon which we make investments enough horses which have no chance whatever to put the percentage on our side after investing on all the remaining acute contenders. We play no race where 35 per cent cannot be had as a minimum profit, and 1 bet annual to get 1,000 per cent on a single race. The reader can readily see our advantage, as the Book Maker has an expense of nearly $200 per day and will not average more than 5 per cent in his book. We save this enormous drain, get a larger per cent, only play races we can reduce to a practical certainty, and operate on a larger scale than any one or two or half dozen books, and give our clients the benefit in Profits which, together with the principal, is subject to withdrawal on demand.

BEAR IN MIND, we do not operate series or pools in which a part of invested capital may be lost, thus destroying the capital of a small number of investors. The earnings on our system of play are passed to the credit of all investors as a unit, and disbursed according to contract.

BEAR IN MIND, we do not place any restrictions whatever on the withdrawal of your profits.

BEAR IN MIND, we do not divert any part of capital invested with us to the purchase of racing stables, stock farms, booking, or other unprofitable turf auxiliaries. Our business is strictly investment on races, as per plan set forth in our booklet.

BEAR IN MIND, we are not in SWADDLING CLOTHES, nor are we struggling for a bare existence. Our position is too strong, too respectable, and too well-known. Truthfully, we are and will continue to be the REIGNING TURF SENSATION, and as to our RELIABILITY or FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY, we take pleasure in referring you to the State National Bank of New Orleans.

If you have idle money to invest, money that should be earning money, a postal card will bring you our Racing Manual or Booklet of useful turf information, with our entirely new and original plan, indorsed by press and public and recommended by prominent bankers and bankers.

Tinkering With Baseball Rules May Cause Trouble

Yale Oarsmen Must Get Down to Work

Speed Skaters Failed To Break Any Records

PLAYING RULES CAUSING KICKS

Joint Committees Will Have Hard Job to Handle.

NED HANLON'S POINT

By JAMES M. NELLIS.

That meeting of the joint rules committee promises to be a warmer affair than was at first thought, and it looks now as though the adoption of a code of playing rules to govern all baseball organizations will bring about as many complications as did the peace arrangement between the leagues.

The leading cause of trouble seems to be the foul strike over which there is a wide difference of opinion. The writers in the cities where American league clubs are located favor the elimination of the rule, while the writers in National league cities stand almost as a unit in favor of its retention, arguing, and very properly, too, that the foul strike is in keeping with the advance made by the game in recent years. The other fellows fail to see it that way, and insist that the rule is a useless one, hampers batting and should be done away with.

Mayor Fleischman of Cincinnati, who seems to have given the matter some thought, has suggested as a compromise that all fouls within first and third base be counted as strikes, and those outside these bases shall be fouls pure and simple, and no penalty attached. It is to be hoped for the sake of the already harrassed umpire that no ruling be made. It is always bad policy to have rules which are of such a complicated nature that they cause trouble between umpires and players. There are, goodness knows, enough rules of that kind in force now.

If the Fleischman suggestion were to be adopted the umpire would be forced to go on the field carrying a tape line, because there would be endless disputes as to whether certain fouls were made inside or outside the penalty line, and there is nothing more annoying than these continued kicks between the players and the umpire. A half an inch would give players an opportunity for a kick which would consume a lot of valuable playing time, to say nothing of tiring out the spectators.

The foul-strike rule was adopted for a specific purpose, and those who have watched its workings will certify that it accomplished its object. Its real intention was to stop that awful annoyance of certain batters fouling off good balls in order to work the pitcher for a free pass to first base. This consumed a lot of valuable time and dragged the game out to that length that spectators, in order to see the end of the contest, would get home late to supper. The foul-strike rule shortened games and that was what it was intended for; and it should be adopted just as it is, or else be done away with altogether. It should not be changed and, in changing it, make it so complicated that it would be sure to cause trouble.

Hanlon Has Good Ideas.

Ned Hanlon, who is a member of the National leagues rules committee and will, therefore, be a member of the joint committee, has offered a suggestion which is worthy of serious consideration. Hanlon advocates that the entire system of scoring be changed, and that the only errors charged to a player should be on dropped thrown balls and dropped fly balls. This would do away with those infield as well as outfield errors in the handling of ground balls which have always caused disputes among scorers as well as spectators, and would make the system of scoring throughout the country more uniform.

There is another thing which such a system of scoring would do; that is, it would do away with what is known as record playing; that there are some record players, in spite of, notwithstanding the assertions to the contrary by certain eastern baseball writers. The great trouble with the present system of scoring is that it calls for a fine use of judgment as to whether a player should be charged an error or the batter given credit with a base hit and certain plays. This has always and will always cause disputes among scorers, because there are no two who ever see the play alike. Any one who has ever attended a game and tried to keep score, and after the contest compared his score with the official record of the game, will vouch for this.

Not only do the spectators and the scorers disagree in matters of this kind, but the players are in the same fix. There was one contest over at Exposition park last summer which will illustrate this point very clearly. It was the game which Deacon Phillippe pitched against a New York team, and at its conclusion the crowd cheered the deacon because it was the the general opinion that he had shut his opponent out, and without a bit or a run. The next morning, however, when the official figures were flashed on the public the Giants were given credit with two hits.

Caused Lots of Discussion.

This game caused no end of discussion and the general opinion was that the deacon had been robbed of a credit which rightfully belonged to him, that of shutting a team out without a hit or a run. The hits scored against him were on hot grounders at infielders, which the official scorer in his judgment—and there is no doubt about it being an honest judgment—figured could not be handled perfectly and in time to get the man at first base. And yet the same players who were reported of errors confessed on the following day, when the game was under discussion, that the grounders on which hits were scored should have been easy chances for them.

In view of this, it is to be hoped that the joint rules committee, when they do get down to business, will turn out rules which are in keeping with the game as it is played today. The rules should be so simplified that they could be easily grasped by everybody, and there should be no complications to cause trouble to players, umpires and spectators. The game has advanced beyond the out-on-a-bound stage and the rule makers should realize this, and they should likewise realize that a game should not consume more than one and one-half hours, and make rules to bring about such contests.

FROM THE PRIZE RING TO THE BAR OF JUSTICE

JOHN F. HURLEY

(Special Telegram to The Gazette.)

BOSTON, February 7.—Boston has produced no man who has had a more varied and exciting career than that of John F. Hurley, lawyer.

At one time well known in Boston, he now finds himself regarded as a stranger by those who knew him best. In the old days, as "Johnny Aarons," he was one of the bright particular stars in the pugilistic firmament.

Now, as John F. Hurley, attorney-at-law, he finds himself practically unknown in his old circle of friends.

As John F. Hurley, lawyer, this man, who leaped from the strenuous life of the ring to the likewise strenuous and active life of the man with the pleas, is a decided success.

In his treatment of witnesses whom he has occasion to examine in court he is most gentlemanly, and yet his cross-examination is dreaded by opposing counsel almost as much as were his cross-counters and pivot blows in the old days, when his praises were sounded as Johnny Aarons.

Few who see the blandly smiling attorney, whose massive head is fast losing its old-time hirsute covering, would associate him with the one time star featherweight or realize the varied career of the very successful young counsellor.

THREE FINE BOUTS.

Jimmy Mason Has His Hands Full Preparing Bouts for the Fighters.

James Mason has three of the most important matches set for this city that the boxing lovers here have had the good fortune to see. Jack McClelland, who has done more real hard fighting than any featherweight now before the public, will be seen here in a match with one of either of the following men: Champion Corbett, Terry McGovern, Joe Bernstein, Andy Daly or Tim Callahan.

Jack O'Brien will likely meet Jim Jeffords here the latter part of this month. His hand is not in shape yet but will be taken out of the cast the coming week and he will then start to train as Jeffords only last week, claimed he could beat O'Brien.

The other match will be Kid McCoy, who at present is seeking matches with the heavyweights. McCoy has been training hard at Muldoon's and last week he posted a forfeit to meet Corbett for a side bet.

Kid Tyler, who, good judges say is the coming bantam champion, will meet Dave Battlestone next Monday night for six or 10 rounds to a decision, at a place to be announced in a few days.

TEN STRAIGHT WINS.

Sharpsburg Reserves Have Quite a Record.

The undefeated Sharpsburg Reserves won their tenth straight victory and their seventh Junior league game last evening by winning from the Nationals of Allegheny 32 to 12. The Reserves won as usual by their great team work, and had everything their own way from the start, although they were not in quite as good form as usual, which shows in the score, which is one of the lowest of any game they have played this season. The feature of the game was the team work of the Reserves, every player on the team having one or more goals to his credit. Criswell of the Reserves scored 16 points and Smith 8. The lineup was as follows:

Reserves—32.		Nationals—12.
Criswell	Forward	Apple
Frape	Forward	Kiefer
Smith	Center	Robin
Zumpft	Guard	Stern
Ward	Guard	Euwer

Field goals—Criswell 7, Smith 4, Zumpft 2, Ward 1, Frape 1, Apple 1, Robin 1, Euwer 2. Foul goals—Criswell 2, Apple 4. Referee—Rosewell. Umpire—Yett.

BASKET BALL NOTES.

The only game of the season between Elders Ridge and East Liberty Academies will be played at Latrobe tomorrow evening.

The Alpine Greys basket ball team would like to hear from any 14-15-year-old teams with halls. Address Thomas Thomas, 1225 Federal street, Allegheny, Pa.

When Manchester plays Carnegie and South Side at Bonsol Orient hall, respectively, the rooting cowbells, etc., as they always are, better watch them. Roberts and Wagner.

The South Side Turner Midgets defeated the Homestead Dwarfs at the latter's floor. The feature of the game was the playing of Reich for South Side and Brown for Homestead.

S. P. Mellon, manager Elders Ridge academy team, would like to have Manager Roberts of South Side meet him at Sportsmen's Supply Company's store at 11 o'clock Monday afternoon.

The Standards defeated the Lafayettes at Concordia hall by the score of 20 to 14. The feature of the game was the playing of Jones and Peasle for Standard and Daisy for Lafayettes.

The Manchester Midgets will journey to South Side to play the team of that place Tuesday evening. As the Midgets have now won 16 successive victories they will make things hum.

The Lawn A. C. defeated the Standard A. C., 50 to 3. It was a game full of excitement from the whistle to the end. The Lawn A. C. team work puzzled the visitors. Evans and Bennett each shot 9 field goals.

The Orient A. C. defeated the Northsides at McAllister hall, 74 to 23. Bigley and Stauffer played a star game at forward. Orients want games with Railroad, Jrs., Ormsby, Jrs., Tribunes, Jrs., Preston C. A. C., Aldys F. Flynn, 2309 West Market street, Allegheny.

Bedford A. C. challenges all 8-year-old teams having balls for any night in February or March—National Tabs and Rambler Midgets preferred. All players will please report for practice Tuesday evening at 7 p. m. sharp. For games, address William E. Scott, 1103 Bingham street, South Side.

The Acorns have organized and contemplate a very successful season. Howard Girdwood has been elected manager. The following players will compose the team: Shettler, Mertz, Kastley, Gardner, Schindler, Collison, Jackson, Jones and N. Mackrell. Colesdidge, Smith and Cook. First class teams desiring games communicate with Howard Girdwood, 1936 Bedford avenue, city.

The Carnegie A. C. Junior basketball team of Braddock defeated the North Side basketball team yesterday at the Carnegie A. C. gymnasium. The score was 30 to 15. The game was very lively and snappy one, and at the end of the first half the score was tied, 12 to 12. There was an enthusiastic crowd present, the gymnasium hall being jammed. About 30 rooters accompanied the visitors.

WILL BE FAST FIGHT.

Matty Matthews and Tom Coulhig Are in Fine Shape for Their Contest Here.

Matty Matthews, the clever Brooklyn boy, and Tom Coulhig, the hard-hitting welterweight from Dunkirk, are scheduled to meet here February 23. Matthews' recent defeats of Kennedy and Ferns have made him a hot favorite with patrons of the sport in the Smoky City, but he is likely to have the hardest contest he ever enjoyed in this part of the country, when he stacks up against Coulhig. The bout is for the welterweight championship and it should be a hummer.

Coulhig has been taking a good rest at his home in Dunkirk, where he formerly worked as a boilermaker in the Brooks locomotive, and he pronounced in his present condition to be a much better man than either Ferns or Kennedy. Coulhig and Matthews have some old scores to settle. At Hot Springs the Dunkirker gave Matty a stiff beating some time ago, and Matthews had the better of a tilt at Fort Erie they are anxious to get together again and settle the question of superiority.

Coulhig has defeated Eddie Burns, Sammy Callahan, Kid McPartland, Joe Keefe, Otto Siefert and Mickey Duffy in Chicago and Toronto. Duffy beat Matthews to a decision in six rounds so that it will be seen Coulhig is a warm foe. One of Coulhig's best efforts was a sharp six-round draw with Frank Erne, when the lightweight champion was fighting at his best and had just defeated Joe Gans.

Manager Billy Corcoran also announces his next contest will be on March 22, between Eddie Kennedy of this city and Jimmie Handler of New York.

TWO HARD GAMES.

Manchester and Bellevue Fives Meet This Week.

The basketball followers of Manchester will witness another Allegheny County league game tomorrow night at Manchester Turner hall. The Bellevue team will endeavor to take a fall out of the lower Allegheny goal-shooters and, if they come up to their expectations they are quite likely to go home with a neat victory. This team has been getting stronger right along. When the county league season started they were by far the weakest team in that organization. However, since that time they have been adding one good player after another to their list and now have together a pretty fast aggregation.

The two latest additions to the Bellevue team are Reffenstein and George Lehrman. Reffenstein, who stands over six feet in his stockings, plays at center for the Crack Westerly Cadet team of last year, and he was considered to be about the most formidable man on that team. Lehrman is the former captain of the Charleroi team which defeated Manchester at Charleroi a few weeks ago.

Manchester is now holding down a first and second place and the boys are beginning to think that second place is low enough for them to be at the close of the season and they promise to make any team hustle to push them out of the coveted resting place. They will meet the Bellevue team twice this week, tomorrow night on the home floor and Friday night at Bellevue. To hold second place they must take both of these games and Bellevue will have to play hard to land either of them.

EXCITING HANDBALL MATCHES.

"Tiger" Buerger and Wixnog Played a Brilliant Game.

The handball tournament for the individual championship was continued yesterday before a very enthusiastic crowd. Many close games of the fine Irish sport took place, but the star event was the remarkable game between Buerger and Wixnog, the two leaders in the race. The game between these two cracks was fast from the very start. As both men are rapid players their fine foot-work was constantly cheered. With the score 19 to 19, Buerger gave a display of head work that brought down the house and also brought him victory by 21 to 19. O'Donnell, the Cardinal entry, also showed on several occasions his knowledge of the game. Score:

Buerger, Woodlake	21	5	.926
Wixnog, Woodlake	19	26	.617
O'Donnell, Cardinal	21	23	.514
Wood, Cardinal	21	26	.447
O'Hara, Olympia	21	36	.368
Boshford, Woodlake	20	38	.441
Reynolds, Concord	20	39	.426
Wilson, Olympia	21	41	.392
Smith, Olympia	20	42	.382
Ellis, Concord	24	44	.352

Keystone Boys Will Help Yale.

NEW HAVEN, CONN., Feb. 7.—(Special.)—Nelson Smiley Hastings, 1905, of Bradford, Pa., and W. J. Jack, 1906, of Indiana, Pa., have been picked for the Yale varsity athletic team, which meets the Crimson aggregation for the first time this year at the B. A. A. meeting in Boston next Saturday night. Jack is entered for the 40-yard dash and is expected to make good for the home team. Hastings was in the Mohawk Athletic club events last week for Yale and made a good showing.

HARD WORK AHEAD FOR YALE ROWERS

Candidates Will Have to Make Up for Lost Time.

SOME TOUGH LUCK

By ALBERT H. BARCLAY.

NEW HAVEN, CONN., Feb. 7.—The end of the junior promenade festivities this week will mean hard work for Yale athletes from now on. Until the "prom" has taken place each year the athletic captains and coaches are inclined to be rather lenient in enforcing hard training. As a general rule, the veterans do not begin to train for the different teams until after the "prom." Then they start in in earnest. Within the next few days all of the candidates for the varsity crew, the varsity nine and the track team will be at work.

Former Captain Philip H. Kunzig, head coach of the varsity crew, has been here during the past week looking over the new material for the eight, and getting the old men to work. Coach Kunzig has arranged his plans so that he will be here once a week until March 1, when he will come to New Haven to remain until after the races have been rowed at New London in June. Mr. Kunzig has paid special attention this week to the candidates for the freshman crew. He has gone through this material in search of likely looking men for the varsity boat, and it is likely that within a short time some of the freshmen will get a trial in the varsity rowing tank.

The make-up of the varsity boat has been badly broken up during the week. Russell Bogue, the stroke of last year's eight, who has been rowing this position again this year, has been laid up with a badly sprained arm. Bogue fell on the ice while skating and has had to carry his arm in a sling. Cornelius Daly, who rowed No. 2 in last year's eight, has also been out of the boat during the week, and it is not certain when he will get back again. Daly has gotten behind in his studies and the faculty have notified him that he cannot do any more rowing until he has made up his back work.

May Lose Daly's Service.

Bogue will probably be able to row again within a short time, but Daly's case is somewhat different. Daly is working hard to make up his back work, but when an athlete once gets behind the faculty is relentless. Unless Daly succeeds in getting rid of his conditions within a short time, he is likely to be kept out of the boat until the end of the present term. He was considered one of the strongest men in last year's eight and ought to be a very much more finished oarsman this year, provided he is able to take advantage of the regular coaching throughout the season. His loss would be a serious one, as he is counted upon for the waist of the boat this year to fill the position left vacant by former Captain Kunzig of Weymouth.

Still another veteran has dropped out of the training this week. This is Tom Johnson, who with Daly got his first lessons in boating in the Wachusett Boat club, at Worcester, Mass. Both men rowed in Ten Eyck's crew. Johnson rowed on the 1901 varsity eight here at Yale and was a substitute last year. He has taken on a good deal of superfluous flesh, and it was this fact which troubled him last year. When Johnson returned to college for the present year, he expected to row again, and, in fact, made his plans to try once more for the shell. He has decided, however, to give it up in view of the fact that he has not been able to get his weight down. He played football all fall and tried hard to knock off some superfluous flesh, but did not succeed in doing so.

Adams Shows Clever Work.

In the absence of Stroke Bogue, Carl Adams, stroke of the varsity four-oar last year, has been setting the pace for the varsity men. Adams is a very clever oarsman, but does not have enough weight to stand the strain of a varsity race. As a pacemaker, he is unusually clever. If he had fifteen pounds more weight he would give Bogue a hard rub for this position.

Capt. Waterman, Head Coach Kunzig, and Professional Coach John Kennedy have been giving the varsity candidates about an hour's work each day. The candidates have been given work on the gymnasium floor, a two-mile run in the open air and some light work in the rowing tank. The rowing tank has been relighten the work. The changes have modeled by Kennedy in order to lessen the body of water in the tank and to been most successful, and the tank work has been made much easier. The coaches nevertheless prefer the open water, and are anxious to get the oarsmen into barges for practice on the New Haven harbor just as soon as possible.

The system of class crews, which was inaugurated by Yale three years ago, is being followed out again this season. The coaches have been gradually picking a varsity squad from these eights. The plan was to first start in with the veterans of last year's crews as a nucleus for the varsity squad. The veterans, who have been at work up to date, are as follows: Capt. C. B. Waterman, C. S. Judson and R. R. Coffin, of the regular eight of 1902, and C. E. Adams and R. H. Hewitt, of the four-oar and substitutes; Walter Cross, the other veteran of last year's eight, who is now in college, has been assisted in coaching the freshmen. Bogue and Daly have also been in the varsity squad. To this squad there has been added recently the following men who rowed in the freshmen boat last June: Thomas Blagden, Jr., W. H. Barnum, Stuyvesant Fish, Jr., S. J. Halpin, F. S. Hartley, H. L. Ferguson and S. G. Stubbs. From the upper class crews the coaches have taken C. Shaw, H. R. Olmstead, C. R. Auchincloss, Harvey G. Mudlinock, Ziegler Sargent, Douglass Van Dyke and L. S. Kirtland.

Will Select the Week.

From time to time, new candidates will be added to this squad as their work in the class crews warrants giving them a trial in the varsity. This system will be followed until the full varsity squad has been selected. It is expected that the full squad will be picked out before the end of the coming week, and the coaches hope possibly to get some idea of how the first varsity eight will be made up. The freshman squad, which at the beginning of the term numbered over 100 candidates, has been cut down to 55 men. This number will be further reduced on March 1. Reeve Schley, 1904, who has good experience on the class crews and also on the varsity eight, has been acting as head coach of the freshmen. He has received more or less assistance from all of the varsity coaches.

Altoona's Five Won the Game.

HOLLIDAYSBURG, PA., Feb. 7.—(Special.)—The Fifth Regiment basketball team of Johnstown was defeated by the Altoona All Collegiate team in an interesting game at Lakemont park this afternoon. The score was 21 to 9. The playing of Holmberg was the feature of the game. The lineup was as follows:

Hollidaysburg—9.		Altoona—21.
Reed	Right forward	Fresh
Evans	Left forward	Halton
Haller	Center	Holmberg
Stroup	Right guard	Olewine
Ebersole	Left guard	Brown

Ice Yachts Raced for Cup.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Feb. 7.—The Hyde Park Ice Yacht club held a 10-mile race today for a club cup open to yachts carrying 200 square feet or less of canvas. Five yachts started. The Monk, owned and sailed by Col Archibald Rogers, won in 56 minutes. The Missie, sailed by S. F. Rogers, was second in 58 minutes.

HUNDREDS OF BIRDS FOR POULTRY SHOW

Entry List Is Largest Ever Known and Finest in the Land Will Be Seen Here.

The annual show of poultry, pigeons and pet stock of the Pittsburgh Fanciers' club has come to be one of the leading events of its kind in the country, and it is expected by the officers of the club that the show which is to open on February 23 will be one of the four largest and best of the year.

Arrangements have been completed to care for a larger number of exhibits than last year, and the entries are pouring in rapidly. Last week brought about 500 entries, which is the largest number ever received during the first week after the entries opened. This week will bring in the majority of the entries, however.

The show this year will be under the same management as in the past. J. M. Skiles will superintend the exhibition, and G. Wahsington Moore, who continues at the head of the Fanciers' club, will have general direction of the work. J. C. Moore, secretary of the club, is handling the entries and correspondence. Inquiries for catalogues came in from all parts of the country this winter and the show has been widely advertised by the liberality of the premiums offered. Not only are the regular prizes more numerous than in any country, but the list of specials has been greatly augmented and in consequence very close competition is anticipated.

The Fanciers club during the past few years has done much to advance the poultry busines in this vicinity, and several small shows held annually in Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia are traceable directly to its influence. These, in turn, aid in establishing and keeping up interest in the business, and as a result the local exhibits at the Pittsburgh show are improving in quality and increasing in number each year. This show is expected to be the best ever given in Pittsburgh as regards quality, but it is almost a foregone conclusion that the local birds will be found wearing their full share of blue ribbons.

Pigeon-breeding hereabouts has been flourishing of late and the local birds will meet from the eastern and western lofts without much fear of the result. J. M. Skiles will be the largest individual exhibitor, but the majority of the fine local birds are being entered by owners who have only small lofts.

The pet stock department of the show will include rabbits, hares, cavies and cats. The latter class is the one which will excite the most interest, as the number of fine cats about Pittsburgh has increased largely since last year.

HIGH SCHOOL TIES WITH EAST LIBERTY

Neither Hockey Team Is Able to Score Winning Goal After Extra Play.

In one of the fastest, cleanest and most scientific games of the year in the Interscholastic league, the High school and East Liberty teams played a tie contest at the Duquesne gardens yesterday afternoon. The score was 1 to 1, and although an extra 10-minute half was played, neither team could break the tie and score a winning goal. The game was so clean that not a player on either team was penalized for rough work during the entire contest.

The members of both teams did some fine work at times and there were several stages during the contest when the plays were very exciting. A large crowd witnessed the contest. The tie game prevented High school from tieing Shadyside for the leadership of the league. The goals were both scored in the first half. There seemed to be no difficulty on the part of the players of each team to take the disc down the ice, but their inability to get the puck successfully into the net caused the small score.

The playing of Ward and Smith for High school were two of the principal features of the game. Time and again these two men got the puck from a scrimmage and carried it down the ice until blocked in front of the goal by players of the East Liberty team. In the extra 10 minutes of play both teams struggled hard to score the winning goal, but it was all to no avail. The game will probably be played off next week. The line-up and score:

High School—1.		East Liberty—1.
Loughney	Goal	Roessing
Booth	Point	Edwards
Crookston	Cover point	Zahneiser
Patterson	Center	Askin
Smith	Forward	Bunting
Robinson	Right wing	Lally

Goals—Bunting and ward. Referee—Hern.

The Amateur Hockey Games.

On Thursday evening another interesting game will be played off between the Lawrenceville Hockey club and the Guarantee Title and Trust Company, both members of the Pittsburgh Amateur league. Every effort will be made to render a spirited, clean and enjoyable contest. The players will line up and report promptly at 8:30 p. m. at left entrance Duquesne garden.

Guarantee		Lawrenceville
Engstrom	Goal	E. Skeeham
Borchers	Point	M. O'Donnell
Truschell	Cover point	Thomas
Wilson	Center	McKinnis
Groves	Forward	Coil
Hilands	Right wing	Sisk

AMONG THE AMATEURS.

The Birmingham A. C. of the South Side would like to hear from the following teams in regard to games: Fosters, Beltzhoovers, Emeralds, and all other teams of that class.

The following is the line-up of the Waltons: J. Ganser and A. Smith, catchers; C. Drehr and J. Schnippert, pitchers; N. Newhardt, first base; H. Gilbert, second base; C. Smith, third base; W. Sebell, short field; H. Engstrom, left field; Edward Schwartz, center field; J. Foster, right field. Subs: J. Schnitzer, R. Davis. All 12 to 14-year-old teams will please write at once to W. E. Jones, Grand avenue, Allegheny.

The Cyclers of Allegheny would like to hear from all 14 to 15-year-old teams for Saturday and Sunday games. The following are the players: Edward Pfeiffer, Edward Bottinger, Edward Niklaus, Charles Mentel, Charles Sandman, William Yetter, William Baker, George Mentel, Norman Muehlbronner and Mascot Edward Schell. Address all communications to Edward Pfeiffer, 114 Spring Garden avenue, Allegheny, Pa.

The Lincoln Athletic club of Lawrenceville have reorganized for the year 1903 and have grounds, considerable expense fitting up new grounds, and would like to arrange games with all first class teams—Millvals, Verner, Shaner, Casino, Windsor, Fairbanks or Aspinwall preferred. Line-up will be as follows: Welsh and Neff, battery; Hamilton, Dixon, Williams and Ferris, infield, and Isengardt, Mellon and Campbell, outfield. Any first class teams wishing games for the coming season address Lewis Kline, manager, 3708 Butler street, Lawrenceville.

The Northside baseball team of Allegheny has organized for the coming season. This is the second year for this hustling ball club, and the players will endeavor to eclipse their work of 1902, which was fine, when it is taken into consideration that they are without home grounds. Manager Clark has strengthened the team, and the coming season alone can foretell the result. The club is now ready to hear from all teams having grounds who desire games with Northside. Managers of teams please address L. M. Clark, 538 Hemlock street, Allegheny, Pa.

The Remington Grays have organized for the coming season with the following players: John Schuck, manager; D. Clapperton, captain; J. Lloyd, secretary and treasurer; William Cummings, catcher; J. Obmon, short; E. Campbell, second; J. Hamilton, third; W. Hamilton, left; H. Schuck, middle; J. Clapperton, right; M. L. Ehinger, and William Browning, subs. The team gave a good account of itself last season under the name of Moon Run Athletic club, and, with the addition of Ehinger, it hopes to stand among all the amateurs of western Pennsylvania. For games address J. Schuck Remington, Pa.

HOCKEY SEASON NEARING CLOSE

Last Scheduled Game Will Be Played at Duquesne Garden March 10.

AMATEUR SPORTING

The hockey season is drawing to a close. There remains yet about one month of the sport, and the championship of the Western Pennsylvania hockey league will be decided by the middle of March. The last scheduled game at Duquesne garden is between the Keystones and Bankers March 10.

After this contest there will possibly be several postponed games played on the ice, while a number of tie contests must be played off between the teams. The personnel of the four teams of the league will remain the same from now on until the close of the season unless in case of emergency, when a special ruling will have to be made by the officials of the league in order to allow any new men to participate in any contest.

A stringent rule adopted at the opening of the season to the effect that no team would be allowed to import players to play in the most important contests at the close of the season will probably hold good. Every player who will take part in the latter part of the season games must have been a member of the team six weeks before the windup of the season.

If this ruling is lived up to, all the teams will finish the season just as they are at present. It seems now entirely problematical if the champion team last season—the Keystones—will win one contest before the end of the season. The Keystones have had exceedingly tough luck this year, and the forming of the Victorias crippled them early in the season. The cause of the team making a poor showing is credited to the management. This organization could have been strengthened, but that matter was sadly neglected and they will have to finish in last place in the race for supremacy as a consequence.

Race for Hockey Honors.

It is expected that all the postponed and tie games will be finished by the middle of March and then will come the exhibition series. There is some talk also of arranging special benefit games for the players of each team and it is quite probable that a post-season schedule may be arranged. The games on this schedule, if arranged, will be finished by April 4, and no more hockey will be seen in Pittsburgh until next fall, after this date.

Some radical changes are looked for if the Western Pennsylvania Hockey league continues to be a reality next season. The Keystones may not be seen on the ice again, but an entirely new organization may take their place. Two additional teams may be added to the league, making a total of six clubs. An increase in the number of clubs should make the race for next season's championship a great deal more interesting, and all the organizations next season will probably be stronger than at the present time.

Basketball in Its Heighth.

The week in basketball circles has not been such an eventful one, but nevertheless much interest is being manifested in the races of the teams in each league for the different championships. The leadership of the Interstate league appears to be with the Indiana team, and it looks as if that organization would walk away with the pennant.

The greatest interest among the local followers of the popular floor game is undoubtedly centered in the race between the teams of the Allegheny county league. This league was formed some time after the organization of the Interstate, and seems to have jumped easily to the front in favor in a short time. The race for the championship in this league lies between Carnegie, South Side and Manchester. Wagner's team is making a good bid for the honors, but Roberts' South Side organization is figuring strongly as winners. Manchester is putting up a clever game.

Ball Players Active.

Although the groundhog saw his shadow the moderation of the weather always awakens interest in baseball circles, and local amateurs have been especially active during the past week. The work on schedules is progressing nicely and by next week many of the most important local amateur baseball organizations will have announced full lists of their playing dates. The college teams in this section have been slow about announcing their schedules, but this is, in all probability, due to the action of the different managers to try and secure the best attractions possible for their respective towns during the playing season.

It remains to be seen whether the double coaching system to be tried this year by Yale, Harvard and several of the other eastern colleges will be a success. It has been predicted by professional baseball men that the system will be decidedly successful, and if it is, by next season local colleges will be hiring two coaches—one for the pitching department and the other to look after the work of the in and outfielders. Where college teams are especially weak is at the bat, and more time will be devoted by the coachers this year to giving the men a good idea of stick work than any other fine point of the game.

In the past month the greatest interest has been aroused among local live bird and clay shooters. Many of the older members of gun clubs in this section are taking an active part in the sport again, as is evidenced by the formation of shooting clubs in the smaller towns around Pittsburgh.

THE RIFLE EXPERTS.

Good Scores Turned In by the Iroquois Members.

The members of the Iroquois Rifle club are looking forward to Tuesday, when an open shoot will be held and some fun is expected. The medal and secret handicap matches have been on all week and the following scores were turned in:

The club invites all rifle shooters to come over to the team shoot of February 10. Will have roast pig supper.

BIG ENTRY LIST.

American Derby Closes With 120 Nominations.

CHICAGO, Feb. 7.—Entries for the American Derby of 1903 have closed with 120 nominations, the pick of eastern and western 3-year-olds being named as possible starters for the Washington Park club's great classic. The race, which is at one and one-half miles, with $25,000 added money as the rich prize, will be run on the first day of the Washington Park meeting, next June.

JOHNNY NILSSON RETAINS HIS TITLE

Champion Speed Skater Took All Professional Events at Meet in Canada.

(By Associated Press to The Gazette.)

MONTREAL, Feb. 7.—Ideal weather conditions, a big crowd, superb ice and large fields in all the events with exciting finishes, combined to make the speed skating championships of America, held here today under the auspices of the Amateur Skating Association of Canada and the National Skating Association of America, a great success. No records were broken, but in the 220-yard amateur and half-mile professional events both the Canadian and American records were equalled. In the other events the time made was disappointing under the conditions.

The feature of the racing was the great work of John Nilsson of Minneapolis. He carried off all the professional events on the card, but not without a race in every instance, the finish in the three-mile event being particularly exciting. Nilsson made the pace almost all the way, but at the final turn fell back into the bunch, and it looked as if he was beaten. But when the men got out on the stretch he came again like a flash, beating Norval Baptie, the North Dakota man, by inches. Norris Wood of the Verona Lake Skating club, New York, won the mile amateur event cleverly. Summaries:

220 yards amateur—Won by F. J. Robson, Toronto; Larry Piper, second; A. Morris, Montreal, third. Time, :29 2-5. In the trial heat Robson equalled the American and Canadian record of :29 1-5.

Half-mile professional—Won by J. Nilsson, Minneapolis; Harley Davidson, St. Louis, second; F. Sandford, New York, third. Time, 1:17 1-5. Equals professional record.

Half-mile amateur—Won by F. T. St. Marie, Montreal; Morris Wood, New York, second; J. Forester, Toronto, third. Time, 1:22 2-5.

One mile professional—Won by J. Nilsson, Minneapolis; J. R. McCulloch, Winnipeg, second; Norval Baptie, Bathgate, N. D., third. Time, 2:50.

One mile amateur—Won by M. Wood, New York; G. Bellefuille, Winnipeg, second; J. Rodwell, Winnipeg, third. Time, 2:57.

220-yards hurdles—Won by Larry Piper, Toronto; F. J. Robson, Toronto second. Time, :28 3-5.

Three-mile professional—Won by J. Nilsson, Minneapolis; N. Baptie, Bathgate, N. D., second; J. K. McCulloch, Winnipeg, third. Time, 8:58 3-5.

Three-mile amateur—Won by G. Bellefeuille, Winnipeg; F. St. Marie, Montreal, second; M. Wood, New York, third. Time, 9:09 1-5.

SHOOTING FOR A TROPHY.

Millvale Gun Club Members Have Something to Fight For.

The Millvale Gun club members indulged in their first shoot yesterday for a handsome gold trophy offered by Bessemer. This trophy goes to the man who wins the majority of the season's shoots, which must be at 25 blue rocks. The first winner was Burnham. The scores made in yesterday's shoot follow:

Events.	10	10	10	10	10
Smith	9	8	7	5	8
Bushe	7	7	9	8	8
Bessemer	9	7	8	10	7
Grall	6	7	5	6	6
Stine	6	7	5	6	8
Burnham	9	10	8	7	10

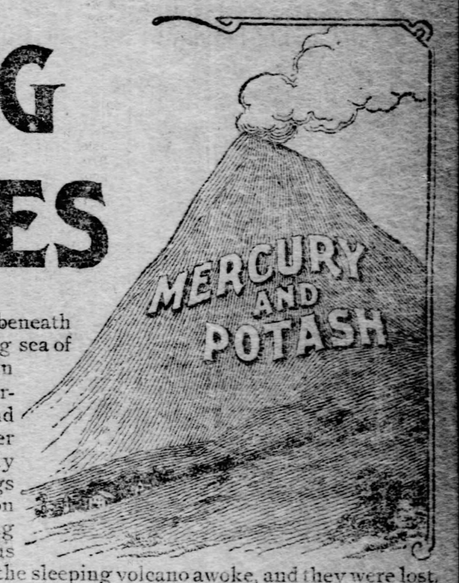
Princeton Wins from Yale.

NEW YORK, Feb. 7.—Princeton defeated Yale tonight at the St. Nicholas rink in a hotly contested hockey game by the score of 4 to 1.

SLEEPING VOLCANOES



Those who live near a volcano know that beneath the calm exterior of the sleeping giant is a raging sea of fire, molten rock and sulphurous gases, but the thin vapory smoke lazily ascending from its crater is perhaps the only external sign of the commotion and tumult within. Living in this atmosphere of danger they soon become insensible to fear and are only aroused to a sense of their peril by the rumblings and quakings which foretell the coming eruption and downpour of heated rock and ashes, scalding mud, blinding, suffocating smoke and sulphurous gases. They were living in fancied security when the sleeping volcano awoke, and they were lost.

Thousands of Blood Poison sufferers are living upon a sleeping volcano, and are taking desperate chances. Under the Mercury and Potash treatment, the external evidences of the disease disappear and the deluded victim believes the cure complete. But the fires of contagion and the deadly virus have only been smothered in the system. The little sore that now and then makes its apparence in the mouth, the slight rheumatic pains in muscles and joints and the red rash that occasionally breaks out upon the body, are warning symptoms, which often go unheeded. Then the rumblings grow louder, the smouldering poison bursts out and the body is soon covered with sores and copper colored splotches and pimples, and all the old symptoms return—sore mouth and tongue, ulcerated throat, swollen glands, and many others that the sufferer believed had been uprooted and destroyed by the Mercury and Potash treatment. Not only do these minerals fail to cure the disease, but work the greatest injury to the system. Mercurial Rheumatism, Necrosis or death of the bones, deep and offensive Ulcers, Salivation, Inflammation of the Bowels and Stomach are some of the horrible effects of Mercury and Potash.

The use of S. S. S. in Contagious Blood Poison cases is never followed by such results. We offer One Thousand Dollars for proof that it contains one particle of Mercury, Potash, or other mineral, but is guaranteed a strictly vegetable remedy. It cures even where the worst symptoms have developed, and the patient, to all appearances, was hopelessly incurable. S. S. S. is an antidote for Contagious Blood Poison, and the only

BANK STATEMENT WAS A SURPRISE

It Showed an Increase of More Than $20,000,000 in Loans--Wabash Issues Strong--Trust Stocks Dominate Local Market.

By JOHN O. BAGLIN, Financial Editor.

The weekly statement of the New York banks yesterday contained a surprise and was of a general character to defy logical analysis. As usual, the surprise was in the item of loans, showing an increase of $20,447,900. The deposits, however, increased to the extent of only $8,401,200, and this, with the decrease of $7,234,800 in specie and legal tenders, left a difference of something like $8,000,000 that cannot be accounted for in the usual way. The surplus reserve decreased $9,335,100, bringing the total surplus down to $18,245,675, as compared with a little less than $18,000,000 at the corresponding date a year ago and $20,262,000 two years ago. Various theories were advanced to account for the unexpected expansion in loans. One was that at least $8,000,000 of the increase was due to the interlocking of capital of one of the members of the clearing house, which was paid during the week. The inference was that subscriptions to this increase in capital, like some that have recently been made in Pittsburgh, were paid for with borrowed money, and that the other banks were carrying these loans, just as they are doing in Pittsburgh. Another was that the Pennsylvania and Lake Shore loans were again figuring in the statement, and that on Monday, when the weekly report of the Philadelphia banks appeared, it would be seen that there had been a considerable shifting of obligations during the week. Still another theory was that the arbitrage operations in Pennsylvania stock and convertible bonds had something to do with the loan expansion, since there was no particular activity in any other part of the stock market. When the Pennsylvania directors anticipated the period during which the privilege might be exercised of converting 5½ per cent convertible bonds into stock at $70 a share, traders immediately began selling the stock short and buying the bonds, because there was an apparent profit in the operation. The sale of short stock would not reduce loans, while the enormous purchases of the bonds, which must be carried until the 16th of next month, would increase borrowing on that account.

The most plausible theory of all, however, was that which suggested a shifting of loans from trust companies to the banks. Call money rates have declined to 2½@3 per cent. Borrowers would naturally pay off their high-rate loans in the trust companies and negotiate new ones with the banks. When the record for the past two years at this season is reviewed it is seen that there was a similar shifting of loans. Thus for the corresponding week last year there was an increase of nearly $29,000,000 in loans and a decrease of $9,727,000 in surplus reserve. It is not recalled that there were any special transactions at that date which would account for such an enormous increase in loans. In the corresponding week two years ago there was an expansion of $23,481,000 in loans and a loss of $4,500,000 in surplus reserve. We were exporting considerable amounts of gold at this period a year ago, and the outlook in the money market was less assuring than at present. Wall street comment upon the bank statement yesterday was of two kinds. One was bearish, the showing being regarded as very unfavorable. The other was apologetic. To the disinterested observer the condition of the banks does not call for apology, and there is nothing in the money market outlook to cause uneasiness. To be sure, last year the heaviest borrowing of the year occurred in February. From the end of January to the first of March, 1902, loans increased $60,000,000, the aggregate reaching $928,000,000, but the latter sum proved to be the maximum. So far this year the borrowing has been pretty evenly distributed, the total increase for the past six weeks amounting to $50,000,000, and within this period two large corporation loans have been announced. A call loan rate averaging somewhere between 2½ and 3½ per cent is a normal rate, and a surplus reserve of $18,500,000 is a healthy surplus.

⊙ ⊙ ⊙

The stock market was rather heavy during the first hour, traders selling in anticipation of the bank showing, but during the final hour there was a recovery from the low point and the tone at the close was steady to firm. The strength of the Wabash issues was the feature of the dealings, and they not only contributed largely to the total sales of 300,000 shares, but they helped to pull up the general market. The common stock advanced to 32 and the preferred to 51¾, and both closed at practically the top. The preferred is now within about 3 points of the highest price ever quoted, which was reached on the boom last year. All the Gould stocks were active and firm, which may be taken as an answer to the rumors current during the week to the effect that a combination was forming to block the ambitious plans of the Gould interest to reach the seaboard. The week has been something of a disappointment to the bulls. The rapid changes in developments in the Venezuelan situation maintained the latter as a factor in the market. The lack of response to the splendid earnings reported by some of the larger railroad systems, the failure of the restoration of the dividend on Reading first preferred to attract attention, and, above all, the rather poor response made by United States Steel to the showing of unprecedented orders on its books, and to its legal victory in the bond conversion suit--all these things speak loudly of the apathy of the general public and the absence of aggressive leadership. Perhaps the leader will appear and the "big men" in the street will take a more active interest in speculation after the adjournment of congress, less than a month from now.

⊙ ⊙ ⊙

Just one-half the number of securities dealt in on the local board yesterday consisted of bank and trust company shares. Gains and losses were about evenly distributed. American Trust, which has been the leader during the week, dropped from 285 to 280, a net decline of 10 points from the last sale of the day before. Colonial Trust was 4 per cent higher, selling at 375. Columbia National bank, after selling at 492, advanced to 495 bid, a record price. Marine National bank sold at 136, a decline of 4 per cent. The most active of the industrial stocks was Crucible Steel common, which opened at 21½ and sold down to 20¾ at the close, a net loss of ⅝ per cent. The preferred declined to 85¼, but recovered to 85¾. Only one small lot of United States Steel common changed hands at 38¾. Fire Proofing common was fairly active and firm, selling above 30 and closing at the top. Pittsburgh Coal preferred was also firm, advancing to 90½. The rest of the market was dull and featureless.

NOTES AND COMMENT.

Twenty-two different bank and trust company stocks changed hands on the Pittsburgh stock exchange during the past week. The total transactions reached 4,446 shares, and taking the average market value, the business represented something like $1,075,000. A considerable percentage of the dealings was of a speculative character, so far as such things can be said of the fluctuations were of more than ordinary violence. American Trust and Safe Deposit were the most active issues. The latter rose from 139 to 142, closing at a net gain of $9 a share. Traders had the benefit of official bullish advices setting forth the terms of the deal for the merger with the Peoples Savings, and bearing the recommendation of the officers that the plan be carried out. The proposition was formally approved by a majority of the stockholders. The sales of the stock during the week amounted to 1,100 shares. There was no lifting of the veil which surrounds the American Trust deal. During the week Colonial Trust advanced from 370½ and 302. The final sale was at 280, a net gain for the week of $80 a share. The terms of the deal are still unknown to the street, and on those who have been buying the stock profess entire ignorance, merely stating that they had a tip to buy, and the latter turned out more profitable than usual with ups. Yesterday a rumor was current that the price would soon be depressed to 250; that this was part of the plan, but that it would again recover and go higher than ever. For more than two months or since the upward movement in the stock became pronounced, there have been rumors of a big deal that would result in the merging of four or five large institutions, completely covering all branches of the banking and trust company field. There have been no deals in recent years that were talked of so long in street circles before any definite information was forthcoming. The keeping of the secret has been as successful as the booming of the stock.

Reviewing the week in the local market, A. E. Masten & Co. say: "The coal stocks relapsed into dullness, as was natural pending the outcome of the conference between the labor leaders and the operators. The latest news is that there will be no improvement as to wages, and if this is confirmed, the coal stocks should do better. It is nearly as certain as anything can be that the demand for coal will equal the ability of the anthracite companies to coup their strike losses. The soft coal trade has not suffered any loss in recent years through labor troubles, and the prospects of the companies are certainly brighter today than ever before. There is nothing in the things to sustain the price of Pittsburgh Coal common and make the stock a favorite speculation. First, the stock is almost certain of inside support when it pleases its account; there is a possibility of its absorption by United States Steel, or a merger into a larger coal combination, and third, its dividend prospects. There is also at least one thing in favor of River Coal common for a speculation, and that is its low price. A hundred shares may be bought outright for the margin required on 10 shares of some of the trust company stocks, and the element of risk is infinitely smaller. What is true of the coal stocks is measurably true of the steel stocks. The iron and steel prospects are extremely bright, the market value of the stocks averages low, when compared with other shares of equal risk, and we will not be surprised if they show a larger percentage of gain within the next two months than anything else."

Wall street forecasts mentioned the Gould stocks as likely to be the leaders of the market during the coming week, particularly the Wabash issues.

Humphries Miller: "The speculation that has been in progress in the Pittsburgh stock market during the past week in bank and trust shares recalls the movement which occurred in Wall street at various times last year in some of the high grade railway shares and clique stocks. Values were forced up to a level out of all proportion to earnings and prospects, only to drop again when stringency appeared in the money market. In the case of the local bank and trust company shares the fluctuations are more violent than in the most highly speculative stocks in the eastern market, and the effect cannot be otherwise than bad. Some of these shares are not abnormally high, when the record of past earnings is studied, but in many of the most active issues the upward movement is based wholly upon rumors of deals which may or may not be carried to a successful issue."

Thomas Wilson: "There was a halt in the movement in the coal and steel stocks with the exception of United States Steel, which was strengthened by the announcement of the favorable decision in the litigation which for months has held up the bond conversion plan. The official statement of the company during the week that the United States Steel Corporation has on its books orders exceeding 6,000,000 tons is the most positive testimony as to the general condition of the iron trade that has ever been given. This statement, taken in connection with the preparations which the Pennsylvania railroad for a continuation of liberal expenditures for improvements this year, makes us feel very confident as to the future of business, and also makes us feel that securities based upon local enterprise are reasonable ones to maintain their present average rate of dividends. Our stock market is not high, compared with other markets, and with a continuation of the easy money market, we feel that there is little risk in buying the market."

Five local stocks scored new high marks during the week. These were American Trust, 302; Columbia National bank, 495 bid; Mercantile Savings & Trust, 95; Monongahela National bank, 505, and Pennsylvania Trust, 535.

After referring at length to the Pennsylvania railroad proposition to increase its capital and debt, James Carothers & Co. say in their monthly review: "As to authorizing the doubling of the capital stock, the proposition is entirely legitimate. As to authorizing a doubling of the bonded debt, or any increase beyond the amount required for a specific purpose, we think the proposition is open to serious discussion. Even with the assurance that the discretion will always be exercised by wise and efficient men, it is a grant of hazardous authority without that assurance. It should not be conferred upon any board of directors nominated by one or two men. The general effect of a large issue of stocks and bonds, and the retention of a large amount of the same in the treasury to be issued at the discretion of a few men, is to depress market values. We have no doubt that the recent hesitation in the investment market is due to a feeling that the impending output of new securities will furnish the opportunity to obtain better bargains than are now available. Within the past three or four years there has been an enormous increase of liquid capital manufactured out of what might be termed fictitious value. This has produced a state of congestion in the investment and speculative market. The inference has been drawn from the recent history and apparent future policy of the Pennsylvania, that other railroads must make relatively as large expenditures in order to maintain the highest degree of efficiency. This inference is justified on its part, but it has seem that at least half of the Pennsylvania's expenditures are not on its own system, but in the acquisition of competing lines. In the second place, the development of the territory traversed by the Pennsylvania has been wholly unprecedented in the history of this or any other country. Here in the Pittsburgh district alone the industrial growth within the past three years would have been remarkable had it been spread over 10 or 20 years. It is altogether improbable that any other section of the country will witness anything approaching it, and that the legitimate capital requirements of other great railroad systems will be measured by a much slower growth. The one event which may cause a repetition of the experience of Pittsburgh and the Pennsylvania railroad will be the construction of the Panama canal, but even here the construction will be relatively slow."

Harbison & Walker Refractories common stock advanced to 16¼ bid yesterday. It was offered at 20, seller 10 days. The initial public sale of the stock occurred during the week at 12. Application has been made for listing the securities on the Pittsburgh stock exchange.

Philadelphia Company was firmer yesterday, the common advancing to 45¾ bid. It is quoted relatively lower than any other stock of its class in the market.

Pittsburgh Drygoods was quoted at 25¾ bid, 30 asked.

Ohio Fuel Supply was quoted at 29¾ bid, 30 asked.

Unlisted bank stocks closed as follows: North American Savings, 122½@125; Iron City Trust, 120 bid; German American Savings & Trust, 101 bid; Colonial Trust, 365 bid; Diamond Savings, 220½ asked; Merchants Savings & Trust, 95 bid.

Edward T. C. Sleese & Co., in their weekly review of the New York stock market, say: "The past week in the stock market was entirely professional, without any public following until the last few days, when there was considerable buying for outside account, and it looks as though an interest were being created that has held aloof heretofore. Without outside support, there can be no bull movement. This seems to be at hand now, and we expect to see a lively market next week, with prices higher at the end of the week. The few priced stocks that we have been accustomed to for the last three weeks are now moving, and we expect them to go still higher. We advise the purchase of both the railway and industrial shares at the present quotations. Advices point to higher prices for the steel stocks owing to the great demand for these dividend payers."

SALES FOR THE WEEK.

EAST END COMPANY TO HAVE $200,000 CAPITAL

Frank McCann Buys More Diamond Street Property--Ten Edgewood Houses Sold---Bindley Warehouse to Cost $250,000.

Another realty corporation, to be known as the Liberty Real Estate Trust Company, will open for business in the East End April 1. Application has been made for a charter. The applicants are John M. Davies, F. E. McGillick, John D. Brown, J. A. Irwin and Angus Heudeson. Incorporators include E. M. Diebold of the Diebold Manufacturing Company; L. F. Seeley of the Seeley-Laid Company, wholesale hatters; J. J. Campbell, auditor and assistant secretary of the Carnegie Steel Company; J. B. McKillips, assistant auditor of the same company; Charles A. Brooks, auditor of the Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company, and Dr. John A. Hawkins. The company will take over the real estate business of Davies & Co., one of the strongest firms in the East End, and Contracting Agent McGillick, Inc. is proposed to do a general real estate and trust business, including a strong insurance and mortgage department. The company has secured as a site the Angus Henderson property, a lot 35.6x80 feet, at the southeast corner of Penn avenue and Shady avenue. The lot is valued at $40,000, is now occupied by a brick building, which the new company will replace with a $50,000 bank and office building as soon as the leases expire.

Still Buying in the Diamond.

Frank McCann has added to his holdings in the Diamond by the purchase of the Green property, in South Diamond street, for $20,000. The deal was handled by Warren & Gray, who secured the property from William M. Hall. The lot measures 48x227 feet and is directly in the rear of the John Dinsling property. A three-story brick building occupied as a store, stands on the site. This lot adjoins the Hartman lot and is near the Hutchinson holdings, both of which face in South Diamond street, and have been acquired by Mr. McCann within the past few weeks.

Through the Commonwealth Real Estate and Trust Company John W. Herron has sold to Messrs. Stein & Aronson the property at No. 5229 Fifth avenue, for $21,000. The lot has a frontage of 24 feet by a depth of 90 feet and is improved with a three-story brick store building. The purchasers bought for an investment, and no improvements are contemplated at present.

Dr. C. C. Rinehart has bought the George W. Haslett property at the northwest corner of Center avenue and Neville street extension, Bellefield, for $18,000. The residence is 2-story in the style of the Queen Anne, with a stone foundation half brick house, on lot, 81x160 feet, and has been occupied for some time by the purchaser.

Ten New Houses Sold.

The Keystone Realty Company has disposed of 10 of the new brick houses of the Modern Building and Loan association in Dewey avenue, Edgewood, for $6,200 each. The dwellings contain eight rooms each and stand on lots 20x100 feet. They were bought by Nicholas Voegtly, Henry J. Myer, John M. Brady, Charles Schwan and B. F. Lee. The houses are in a first-class neighborhood and are ready tenters.

J. A. Young & Co. were the brokers in an exchange deal of East End property valued at $88,000. For William Hays they sold to George Johnston three ten-room brick houses on lots 30x140 feet each, situated on the north side of Linden avenue, between Elm and Maple avenues, Edgewood, for $25,000. The houses are nearly new and are handsomely finished. In part payment for the residences Mr. Johnston tendered a plot, 217x300 feet, on the north side of Penn avenue, near Shadyvale avenue, Penn ward, Wilkinsburg. This plot has erected on it an eight-room frame house and was put into the deal at $12,500, the balance of the purchase being cash. Mr. Hays will plot the Wilkinsburg frontage into 28 lots and put them on the market at once.

The same brokers sold for Evan Jones and C. W. Heimold to A. J. Brown and Eleanor Negley two lots, 60x140 feet each, on the north side of Jackson street, Penn, Hoerchler street, Nineteenth ward, for $7,200. The buyers will improve with two houses costing $5,000 each.

More Houses for Hill District.

Through the Aronson Realty Company William Morgan has sold to Attorney I. Leonard Aronson a nine-room brick house, on a lot 17½x100 feet, in Wylie avenue, extending from Horton to Morgan streets, for $12,500. The buyer contemplates the erection of eight small houses on the land. The same brokers sold for Attorneys Wise & Miner a 14-room business block on lot 22x70 feet, in Wylie avenue, between Crawford and Fannehill streets, for $7,000.

Through the agency of S. H. Lloyd, Samuel N. McClinton has bought the Lloyd property on the east side of Fairmount way, near Soup street, Twenty-fifth ward, for $20,000. The lot measures 50x165 feet, and the residence is a 12-room brick house with all modern improvements.

Mary Burkle has conveyed to Mrs. Minnie P. Burgeman an improved property, 25x100 feet, on the southeast side of Penn avenue, Ninth ward, for $10,000.

The deed was also entered yesterday in the sale of the Daniel H. Wallace property, a lot 40x54 feet, at the northeast corner of Fourth avenue and Decatur street, the consideration being $125,000. The deal was made by P. D. Nichols & Co., who secured the property for Henry M. Hall. The purchaser, it is said, contemplates the erection of a fine business block on the site.

A $250,000 Contract Awarded.

The Duquesne Construction Company has secured the contract for the erection of the Bindley Hardware Company's warehouse, which will cost $250,000. The building will be 70 feet wide and seven stories high, at the intersection of Anderson avenue and the Pennsylvania railroad, Shadyside. It was designed by Architect Charles Bickel. A large force of men is already working on the foundations, and it is estimated that the building will be completed in three months.

Bids will be received this week by Architect Harry S. Ralf on the No. 5 engine house to be built on Forbes avenue, at a cost of $25,000. The site is 48x80 feet, and the building will be a two-story brick.

Architects E. J. Carlisle & Co. are taking estimates on the Johnson school and office building in Braddock avenue, Braddock. The building will be four stories high, 48x120 feet, and will cost about $40,000.

Architect Ludwig Vitz is taking bids on the three-story, frame flat building to be erected by Mrs. A. C. Graff in California avenue, Allegheny, at a cost of $7,000. He also has plans for a $5,000 brick house for Dr. H. S. Earnhart in McKees Rocks.

Notable Week in Real Estate.

The sale of the Smith block for $1,000,000 the past week puts Pittsburgh on a level with New York and Chicago, which are fond of boasting of their million-dollar deals. Although by no means the only deal of this size consummated in their city, it is conspicuous as being the largest deal in city property ever handled by a single real estate company, and by the land title and trust company's office building that has ever changed hands in the city. Two other deals helped to make the week a very prominent one in real estate circles, the sale of the Bindley property and the Episcopal church in Ninth street, and of the Sauer lot at No. 501 Market street. The refusal of two churches to sell their properties at prices that a few months ago have been considered exorbitant shows that other downtown churches have much to hope for if they contemplate selling their present sites. Probably no city in the country by its remarkable growth has contributed so much to the wealth of its churches as Pittsburgh, and the handsome and costly edifices that are springing up in the residence districts are gratifying evidence of their prosperity. In residence sales the week has been a record-breaker for this year showing that the rush for new homes is setting in especially small ones. It is fairly one, and that the man who contemplates buying will do well to scan the prospects at once. A total of 179 deeds, amounting to $1,880,030, passed through the recorder's office by far the largest record made thus far this year.

Long List of Good Sales.

The week's record of conspicuous sales follows: The Real Estate Trust Company for the Martha Smith heirs to Henry W. Oliver, the Smith block, $1,000,000; the Commonwealth Real Estate & Trust Company to an unknown buyer, the St. Andrew's Protestant Episcopal church property, Ninth street, $140,000; Liggett & Goehring for John Sauers to P. J. McNulty, No. 501 Market street, $135,000; the Union Realty Company for Reed B. Coyle to George W. Jones and Joseph H. Scandrage, 10 flat-ages in Shady and Homewood avenues, $40,500; W. L. Scott & Co. for the Bindley Trust Company, to an unknown party, No. 425 Federal street, Allegheny, for $35,000; the Trustees of Trinity Church for Miss Mary Powell to J. C. Crosby, four houses in Clearview street, $34,000; George Schmidt & Son for the Freyvogel heirs, to an unknown party, property at the southeast corner of Fifth avenue and Miltenberger street $35,000; Estep & Co. for William Shaugenhoupt of McKeesport, to Minnie L. Collin of Bradford, three houses in Robinson, Penn township, $20,000; Peebles & Dilworth for William C. Peider to C. T. Heineman, a two-thirds in 9 Sixth avenue property, $22,800; J. Dawson to Dr. J. Guy McCandless, No. 5424 Center avenue, $20,000; Charles J. O'Brien, a residence in Baum Grove, $20,000; Clarence Ripley to an unknown buyer, a residence at the corner of California avenue and Davis street, Allegheny, $21,000; David W. Beaton sold Jennie White to Charles and T. T. Riffle, a two-thirds interest in four acres in Sharpesburg, $20,000; the properties at Nos. 14 and 16 Ninth street, were sold by the Commonwealth Real Estate & Trust Company to Mary Cuff, $17,500 and $16,000, to George A. Kim and J. A. Baker, and No. 32 Ninth street was sold by George Peos, to F. N. Hofstot for $18,000. H. C. Ward to Dr. Mary Jones, 3 acres in the leasehold on the McKintosh property at No. 823 Federal street, Allegheny, for $18,000.

Opinion Divided as to Prices.

In spite of the high prices prevailing and the uncertainty in the labor market, the amount of building being announced is surprisingly large. With at least three theaters on the boards for this season, a half dozen downtown boroughs business blocks, the new post office building, the Wabash station and the numerous church and parish buildings that have been announced, Pittsburgh is likely to have a busy building season. More high class apartment houses are booked for spring building than ever before, and two of them will equal anything of the kind in the country in the beauty and convenience of their apartments. It is probable that the present outlook that more dwellings will be built this year than last, the extreme scarcity of houses of all kinds being a great incentive to small capitalists and speculative builders to large enterprises. Opinion is divided among architects as to whether the cost of building will be perceptibly increased. Some fear an increased wage tariff in the spring to all outlines of labor, and say that there is a decided tendency among building material men to advance the prices of their goods as soon as the season arrives, while others are fond of boasting of their million-dollar deals. Although by no means the only deal of this size consummated in their city, it is conspicuous as being the largest deal in city property ever handled by a single real estate company, and by the land title and trust company's office building that has ever changed hands in the city. Two other deals helped to make the week a very prominent one in real estate circles, the sale of the Bindley property and of the Episcopal church in Ninth street, and of the sale of work, and the present season is the best known for years. More farms are being sold, there are more inquiries, the prices are higher and a larger percentage of the deals are cash bargains than ever before. In Western Pennsylvania and Eastern Ohio broker say that farm properties are fully 10 per cent higher than two years ago. Two conditions are acting in a peculiar way to keep the market full of buyers and sellers. The wonderful prosperity of the past year has given the residence boys and young men from the country districts to the mills and workshops of the city, where steady employment at what seemed high wages, allured them from a less lucrative occupation on the farm. As a result there are in every township many old people who find it impossible to secure farm hands that are reliable and having tired of the burden of work are selling their farms at prosperity figures. On the other hand farmers who have disposed of their coal and oil rights for a considerable sum are rapidly putting this money back into dairy and grain farms. They with the thrifty workingmen in the towns and cities who are investing in poultry and buckwheat farms, have helped to keep up the high prices of farm products and are now selling farms of their own, and city dwellers looking for summer homes form a large and profitable class of buyers, most of whom are ready with a large proportion of the purchase price.

THE MONEY MARKET.

The local money market has continued easy throughout the past week. Brokers report that they are now paying not over 5½ per cent for call loans and many of them have been offered 5 per cent money. The demand, however, has not been large. It is expected that a national bank call will come within the next few days, and it is possible that after the statements have been made current rates will be still further shaded to the best borrowers. BULLISH SENTIMENT IN CHICAGO MARKET

All Grains Rule Strong and Higher and Provisions Take Upward Trend

[By Associated Press to The Gazette.]

CHICAGO, Feb. 7.—Wheat showed decided strength today and the volume of trade was fair. The opening was strong on higher cables. Everything seemed to favor the bulls, the outside markets being strong and a good export inquiry being reported at the seaboard. Under these bullish conditions shorts covered freely, which aided in advancing prices still further. A report from San Francisco showing an advance there of 1½ was one of the principal factors in the upward trend of prices, while the strength in coarse grains also aided the advance. Primary receipts were 505,000 bushels against 340,000 bushels a year ago. Minneapolis and Duluth reported receipts of 401 cars, which, with local receipts of 33 cars—2 of contract grade—made total receipts for the three points of 434 cars last week and 301 cars a year ago.

Corn was more active than for some time past. Firm cables, a fair cash demand and the strength in wheat were the main bull influences, while no improvement was noted in the car situation. The close was strong. Local receipts were 387 cars, with none of contract grade.

Oats were directly influenced by the decision of the arbitration committee making the settlement price for the July oats controversy 37½c. This led shorts to believe the settlement on the board favored those who manipulated the market during the summer, and in view of the fact that present indications point to another attempt to manipulate prices of the May option, there was considerable anxiety among shorts and covering was general. There was some realizing by prominent holders, but the market held decidedly strong and the close was at the top. Local receipts were 106 cars.

There was a moderate trade in provisions, but the market was firm on fair commission house demand and on covering by shorts who sold yesterday expecting liberal receipts of hogs today. The strength in grains was an influence late in the day. The close was firm.

IN THE OIL FIELDS.

Operations in the lower southwest last week failed to reveal anything of a startling nature. A Big Lime producer in the lower edge of Belmont county and a few good producers in the Cow Run district in Westmoreland county were the features. The market remained stationary at $1 50 throughout the week, and gives rise to the opinion that it will not be reduced again in the near future. The new territory in the producing territory is still great and the determination to keep up the scarch is in no way abated. It must be admitted, however, that there is little encouragement held out by many of the many failures during the winter months. Aside from those found in Southeastern Ohio, the winter months promise to go by without finding a single new pool in West Virginia.

Kentucky is still held out as a possibility, but when one measures the success that has been attained during the past year by the publishers of the present production of 1,000 barrels a day, there is nothing alarming in that quarter.

The Big Lime district in Sycamore valley, Morgan county, Ohio, is coming to the front with more good producers.

The Carter Oil Company has drilled in its No. 4 and 4 on the S. B. Piper farm. The first is showing for 150 and the last for 75 barrels a day.

On the west side of the Folsom district in Wetzel county, W. Va., the Corning Oil Company has completed its No. 9 on the Hezekiah Ford farm and has a 125-barrel gusher in the Gordon sand. On the same side of the developments the South Penn Oil Company has drilled in its No. 20 on the Gephe Robinson tract and the well produced 20 barrels the first 12 hours.

In the northeast end of the development the South Penn Oil Company has drilled its test well on the Sarah Heldreth farm through the Gordon and has a show for a fight producer. The hole has filled up 1,000 feet with fluid and will be shot.

The same company's test on the Cephas Higgins farm has been drilled deep into the Gordon and has made a 15-barrel flow. It will probably make a 50 or 60-barrel producer after being shot.

In the Grass Run development in Harrison county, the South Penn Oil Company has drilled its test on the Olive Plum farm through the Gordon sand to a depth of 2,065 feet below the Pittsburgh coal and failed to develop any oil. It will be drilled 200 feet deeper and unless oil or gas is encountered it will be abandoned.

In the Salem district, on Greenbrier creek, the South Penn has drilled its test on the E. G. Davis farm into the Gordon and has 800 feet of fluid in the hole. It may improve with deeper drilling.

In the Yellow Creek district, Calhoun county, the South Penn has drilled its test on the H. Burr farm, through the Berea grit and has a duster. They will drill deeper, searching for a lower producing formation.

In the Eureka district, Pleasants county, the Vesperville Oil Company has completed its No. 9 on the F. K. Hills farm and has a show for a 25-barrel producer in the Cow Run sand. This district has presented some good producers, the last 8 on this farm starting at 200 barrels a day.

Near Harrisville, Union district, Ritchie county, the Hartman Oil Company has drilled its test on the Stephen Hartman farm and has a show for a 50-barrel pumper in the Keener sand.

In the development south of Marietta, and one mile in a southeasterly direction from the gravel bank, Buckler & Co. have drilled their test on the Lafe Smith farm through the Keener sand and have a duster.

South of Sisterville, Tyler county, Fox, John B. Rayel has drilled his test on the J. P. Stewart farm through the sand and has a duster. Northeast of Smiths Fork Miller Bros. have drilled out of luck at their test on the K. Davidson farm.

Coffee and Sugar.

NEW YORK, Feb. 7.—The coffee market opened steady, with prices unchanged to five points lower, affected by weak European cables; fewer bearish receipts at Brazilian ports than expected; local realizing and absence of bull speculation. Trade was quiet all the session, over the close selling by shorts of the many failures during the winter months. Aside from those found in Southeastern Ohio, the winter months promise to go by without finding a single new pool in West Virginia.

OIL CITY, PA., Feb. 7

IN GREAT HURRY AND IN THE DARK

Citizens Plan to Pass the First of Series of Appropriation Ordinances.

USING GAG ON COUNCILS

Trying to Make Political Capital Out of Honest Members' Desire to Understand This Peculiar Financial Measure.

After holding back the annual appropriation ordinances past the time prescribed by law and fixing them in secret meetings, the Citizens leaders of councils now propose to rush them through the lower branch of councils without a chance for examination and discussion.

This was one of the practices for which the "reformers" condemned the old regime, yet the Citizens managers are outdoing anything ever attempted in the palmiest days of the old ring rule.

The Citizens intend on Monday night, when the first appropriation ordinance is presented, to move a suspension of the rules and to put the measure on final passage. If the rules are suspended all debate will be shut off, for no discussion is allowed when an ordinance is on final passage.

With a full attendance of members of common branch rules cannot be suspended, for it requires a three-fourths vote, and the Bigelowites cannot command that number. It is the plan of the Bigelow leaders to make the motion to suspend, even if they know the motion will be defeated, and they will then claim the ordinance is being delayed by the other side.

The appropriation ordinance is the most important measure councils act upon. Careful consideration is required to put the measure in proper shape for passage, for often items have to be revised, and this can only be done after ample discussion.

In view of the manner in which the Citizens have twisted the appropriations in their secret meeting, an inspection will be more necessary this year than ever. The appropriations show not only that many branches of the service have not been sufficiently provided for, but that the sums set aside for other purposes favored by the Bigelow ring, are higher than they ought to be.

If the ordinance is taken up on second reading, a discussion will be allowed and the items can be considered. Under the rules of councils, however, the ordinance must go over to the next meeting for a third reading.

While the Bigelow members are anxious to put the first appropriation ordinance through common council in a hurry, and then raise the campaign cry that they have given the people a 14-mill levy, the ordinance for water extension will not be adopted in such haste. It is the intention to present this as a new ordinance and then refer it back to the finance committee, where it will probably remain until after the election, to be disposed of then as the Citizens finance committee may see fit.

REPRESENTATION FOR MEMBERS OF FAIR SEX

Women Will Appear More Strongly in Stone Than in the Flesh in New Sky-Scraper.

While it has been announced by the agents of the Farmers Deposit National bank building that no female tenants will be allowed to take apartments in the big skyscraper, the exterior of the structure will be adorned with marble goddesses, and, in consequence, the fair sex will not be entirely ignored.

Sixteen draped figures have been ordered from New York to be placed in the bays between the windows on the third floor of the building. The figures will be of heroic size and will represent an idealization of Venus.

Preparatory to the placing of the figures on the walls, a sub-contract has been let by the George A. Fuller Company for the washing of the building. Eight men, swung on painter's ladders, have undertaken the task. They could accomplish the work in less than a fortnight, but freezing weather has hindered them, and more than a month will be spent in cleaning the walls and in pointing the seams in the masonry.

The cleaning is done with water and soap. It costs more than $1,000 to do the work, and that sum will be spent by the owners of the building every year to preserve its immaculate marble from the grime and dust of the streets.

The Quinby Editions of Paul de Kock.

The various editions of the writings of Charles-Paul de Kock, published by the Frederick J. Quinby Company of Boston, concerning which an elaborate article was published in a recent issue of The Gazette, are attracting much attention from booklovers all over the country. Some of the editions de luxe (each of which is limited to a small number of sets) have been disposed of, and no more copies can be had at any price. The more popular editions are now in demand. These, as well as the costly editions, are sold only to subscribers, but the prices are within the reach of people of moderate means.

Maccabees' Case Decided.

LANSING, MICH., Feb. 7.—State Insurance Commissioner J. V. Barry has handed down his decision in the case of the petition of the great camp, Knights of the Modern Maccabees. The commissioner says he is of the opinion that there is no showing made in the answer of the supreme tent that would justify any interference on his part with the business and operations of the great camp.

Georgia Negro Lynched.

DUBLIN, GA., Feb. 7.—Lee Hall, colored, who shot and mortally wounded Sheriff Crawford last Wednesday night, was taken from jail at Wrightsville this morning and lynched.

CAPT. L. B. RICHARD HAS A UNIQUE RECORD

Claims He Had Largest Number of Relatives in the Civil War.

Capt. L. B. Richard, secretary of the Ninth regiment, Pennsylvania Reserve Corps, and an employe of the city treasurer's office, boasts of having had more relatives in the Civil war than any other man that served on the Union side. Capt. Richard has been secretary of the Ninth regiment organization for 15 years. He is a member of the Union Veteran Legion No. 1, a resident of the Twentieth ward and for 31 years has held a position under the city treasurer.

He gives the names and number of near relatives that participated in the late unpleasantness between the north and south, and invites any veteran to produce a record that will surpass it. None of those whose names he mentions is more distant in relationship than first cousin, and all enlisted for three years.

Hugh Robb, an uncle, served in an Illinois regiment; W. P. Higgus, a brother-in-law, in the Eighth Ohio regiment; R. S. Richard, George and John L. Richard, brothers, in the One Hundred and Eleventh Ohio; Jacob, John and Charles Richard, cousins, in the same regiment; Reuben Richard, cousin, in the One Hundred and Twelfth Ohio; W. S. Richard, cousin, in the One Hundred and Forty-fourth Ohio; Jacob B. Fry and John J. Fry, cousins, in the Forty-ninth Ohio; Ambrose Richard, cousin, in the One Hundred and Eleventh Ohio regiment; William Richard, cousin, in the Fifty-seventh Ohio; John R. Richard, cousin, in the Eleventh Pennsylvania; Conrad Leslie and Asa Baird, cousins, in the One Hundred and Eleventh Ohio; William and Joel Mygrants, cousins, in the Tenth Michigan cavalry; August and John Fortney, cousins, in an Ohio cavalry regiment; Joseph Drake, cousin, in the One Hundred and Eleventh Ohio cavalry, and Patten McCall, cousin, in the Eleventh Pennsylvania cavalry.

Capt. Richard says there is a long list of others who became related to him after the war by marriage. The captain has taken an active part, as a member of the Union Veteran Legion, in protesting against the proposed erection of a statue to Gen. Robert E. Lee on the battlefield of Gettysburg. He criticises the member who introduced the bill in the legislature to appropriate $25,000 for this purpose.

"The proposition to erect a monument to commemorate the achievements of Gen. Lee would be one of the greatest insults that could be offered to a Union veteran," said he. "Although I think Lee was a greater general than all the generals of the war on both sides, yet he caused more sorrow, made more widows and more children fatherless than any man since Napoleon."

Picnic Books Are Open.

Dates for picnics and outings at beautiful Cascade park are now ready to be assigned, and the demand is already greater than in any former season. Many improvements have been made at that resort. A mammoth new roller coaster, "laughing gallery," and a number of other attractive amusements, makes Cascade a most popular place for church and society outings. Committees desiring information about dates, rates, etc., can procure same by addressing

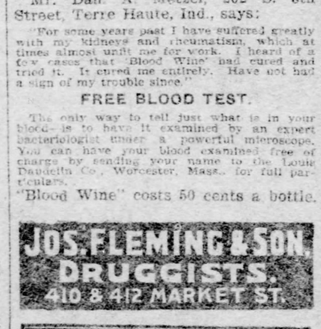
KIDNEY DISEASE IS FATAL

Blood Wine is a Wonderful Protection.



James B. Mirick.

When disease gets into the kidneys it is just as certain to take a person off as leprosy, unless it is checked before it goes too far. If people just knew the danger that lurked in diseases of these delicate organs they would be as careful of them as they are of their eyes. People who have sound kidneys should understand how to protect and take care of them. "Blood Wine" is a sure cure of Kidney Diseases, because it removes the poisons that collect in the blood through the inactivity of the kidneys.

"Blood Wine" is truly a most remarkable medicine. In my case its work has been little short of a miracle. For some time I suffered with Kidney disease and Rheumatism, of a most painful and advanced type. I tried about everything, without relief, and expected the same result from "Blood Wine," but fortunately for me when I struck "Blood Wine," I struck the Rock of Gibraltar. It stood my severe test and conquered my trouble, and today I am a well man, due wholly to this great medicine. To my mind there is absolutely nothing that will compare with it, and I have no hesitation in advising any one in ill health to give it a thorough test."

Just read this letter from Mr. James B. Mirick, Worcester, Mass.:

"As a tonic and invigorant as well as a specific for all kidney and bladder ills 'Blood Wine' is unexcelled. I have used it and do not hesitate to heartily recommend it."

Miss A. Davis, 186 Washington Street, Boston, Mass., says:

"For kidney trouble, I believe there is nothing better than 'Blood Wine.' I have been troubled with difficulties arising from kidney disease for years, and have found nothing to compare with 'Blood Wine.'"

Mr. Dan. A. Metzel, 202 S. 8th Street, Terre Haute, Ind., says:

"For some years past I have suffered greatly with my kidneys and rheumatism, which at times almost unfit me for work. I heard of a few cases that 'Blood Wine' had cured and tried it. It cured me entirely. Have not had a sign of my trouble since."

FREE BLOOD TEST.

The only way to tell just what is in your blood is to have it examined by an expert bacteriologist under a powerful microscope. You can have your blood examined free of charge by sending your name to the Louis Daudelin Co., Worcester, Mass., for full particulars.

"Blood Wine" costs 50 cents a bottle.

Advance Sale of Spring Suits.

The experience of past seasons has told the women of Western Pennsylvania to expect great things of our far-famed suit section and for spring 1903 we are ready to more than uphold our enviable reputation. Immense early orders were placed by us with the leading manufacturing tailors and the result is that the largest advance arrivals of spring frocks ever brought to Pittsburgh are now in our store. These heavy purchases resulted in liberal price concessions by the makers, and the result is that never before was the season opened with garments so attractively priced as now. In most cases our offerings represent a saving of 25 per cent, and often more than 25 per cent, on garments of unapproachable character. The styles we have received from the best designers in the country, yes, the world. They are exclusive, elegant and captivating. A glance over this advance sale's gathering will reveal a wealth of elegant modes for spring wear.

KING'S ILLNESS SHOCKS SOCIETY

House Party at Chatsworth Loses Its Enthusiasm by Absence of Sovereign.

NEW SCENES IN DUBLIN

First Drawing Room of Lord and Lady Dudley Brilliant Success. Number of American Women Numbered Among Guests.

[SPECIAL CABLE TO THE GAZETTE.]
(Copyright, 1903, by New York Herald Co.)

LONDON, Feb. 7.—When it became known in the early afternoon on Monday that the king was ill a thrill of apprehension ran through London. Until definite information was forthcoming some of the wildest rumors were afloat. It was suggested that his majesty would have to undergo a "second operation," while the fertile imaginations of others insinuated that the king had had a sudden stroke of paralysis.

Everyone was soon relieved, however, to learn that his majesty was suffering merely from a slight cold. It was while automobiling on Saturday that the king caught a chill. He was out in his new machine, and the morning being mild, wore only a light overcoat, with the result that he caught a chill, but would not give in that he was ill until Monday. Fortunately, the attack of influenza, which followed the chill, was not of a serious nature.

The king was very much grieved to be compelled to give up his Chatsworth visit. So determined was he to go that while suffering somewhat on Sunday night, he showed no outward sign. Gen. Miles, who dined with his majesty on that night, remarked that the king looked remarkably well.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry White were also among the king's guests, and at dinner on the night previous, Mrs. White sat to the king's left.

House Party's Ardor Dampened.

The house party at Chatsworth was not given up, as the guests had arrived, and arrangements for illuminations and preparations for the theatrical bill and other festivities had been made. But quite a damper was thrown over the whole affair by the abandonment of the visit of the king and queen.

Very different were the scenes in Dublin at the first vice-regal functions under the Dudleys, where the festivities took the shape of rejoicing over the recovery of Lady Dudley from a recent operation for appendicitis. Lady Dudley looked lovely, though rather thin, but did not appear to suffer fatigue from her arduous duties. The first levee under the new regime, with which the week's festivities began, was a magnificent scene. Lord and Lady Dudley spared no pains or expense to do everything well. Inside the castle the spectacle was a most brilliant one.

Among those in the large assemblage, not a few Americans were noticeable. There were Mrs. Henry White, Miss Muriel White, Lady Barrymore, Miss Post and Lady Essex. The magnificent new state livery of Lord Dudley was very much admired. The servants were dressed in beautiful rich purplish blue, with facings of pale lemon yellow with the coronet embroidered on their epaulettes.

Then Came Dinner Party.

After the gentlemen had made their bow to Lord Dudley the scene changed to another room, where sat Lady Dudley and most of the ladies of the house party, including the duchess of Abercorn, Lady Alexandra Hamilton, Katherine, duchess of Westminster, Lady Mollie Grosvenor, Lady Annesley, Lady Zingall, Lady Mabel Crichton and the American ladies mentioned above. Then came a large dinner party, at which, of course, all the house party were present. The feature of the evening was the engagement of Sousa's band, which gave a concert after dinner, playing its well known repertoire of popular American music. In the center of St. Patrick's hall, where the concert was held, sat Lord and Lady Dudley on large red and gold chairs, with their chief guests nearby them. On Lady Dudley's left sat Prince Francis of Teck, Lord Enniskillen, the duchess of Abercorn, in gray satin with a few diamonds in her hair, Lady Essex in oyster-gray satin, with diamonds on the sleeves, Lord Lurgan and Mrs. Henry White, Lady Barrymore, looking very handsome, sat near the duke of Abercorn. The performance of the band was received with immense enthusiasm.

After the concert Lord and Lady Dudley came forward and personally complimented Sousa for having given such a charming and successful entertainment. They also talked to Mrs. Sousa, who had been invited to attend.

Season's First Drawing Room.

On Wednesday night came the first drawing room of the season, at which was the largest turn out ever seen at any such gathering in Dublin castle. The crush became awful before the function had long begun. One continuous stream of people passed before their excellencies for quite a couple of hours. Then into St. Patrick's hall, which presented a very fine appearance, but was crowded to excess. All the members of the vice-regal party were in the throne room, the ladies of the party, magnificently dressed, forming a remarkable contrast to the dresses of the ladies in the general circle. Among them it must be admitted some really magnificent toilettes were seen, but as a rule, they were not conspicuous for beauty. In fact, the general appearance of the dresses was hardly equal to those worn by the operatic chorus at Covent Garden.

Lady Dudley never appeared to greater advantage. She was dressed in white crepe with some priceless lace and a train of silver and white embroidered gauze. Her jewels were superb. They consisted of a huge diamond crown, with pearl-shaped pearl points, a long chain of pearls, and diamonds, and 12 rows of very fine pearl. Under the diamond crown she wore a lovely white lace veil, which fell right down her train. The effect was most becoming to Lady Dudley's oriental style of beauty.

A very striking dress was that worn by Lady Essex. It was made of creamy white, embroidered gauze and satin, with a train of brilliant rose-red crepe-de-chine.

FRANCE BADLY WANTS COUPE INTERNATIONAL

[SPECIAL CABLE TO THE GAZETTE.]
(Copyright, 1903, by New York Herald Co.)

LONDON, Feb. 7.—The Automobile club of Great Britain, in endeavoring to fix July 9 as the date and Ireland as the scene of this year's Coupe International, is meeting with considerable opposition. While it is understood that America favors the date suggested, both France and Germany strongly urge that the race be held earlier.

It must not be lost sight of that France has not yet given up hopes that after all the big race may be held in her territory, and an earlier date determined upon is better, as the French machines are in a very forward state, made necessary by the time fixed for the Paris and Madrid race.

On the other hand, the Automobile club of Great Britain is much encouraged by the enthusiastic support, which all classes of Irish people, in contrast to the general attitude of English people, give to the proposition to hold the race in the Emerald Isle.

It is now hoped that the strength of public sentiment will induce the cabinet to formulate a special bill authorizing the race in Ireland, which will be presented as a government measure, and that there would be no doubt of the result if this were done.

Mont Pelee Continues Active.

PARIS, Feb. 7.—The governor of the island of Martinique, in a dispatch to the colonial office, announces that the Mont Pelee volcano continues active, that its summit is constantly changing shape and that masses of incandescent matter are thrown out.

AMERICANS AID STARVING FINNS

Sixteen Thousand Dollars Contributed from the United States.

FAVORITISM IS SHOWN

[ASSOCIATED PRESS CABLE TO THE GAZETTE.]

ST. PETERSBURG, Feb. 7.—The correspondent of the Associated Press returned here yesterday from Helsingfor. He found the measures for the relief of the distress in Finland apparently well organized. The distribution of funds is carefully supervised. The Finnish national relief committee has received, up to the present, $16,000 from American relief organizations. General surprise and gratitude is expressed at the large contributions which the committee has received.

Other foreign countries have contributed $3,000, and in Russia $25,000 has been collected, including $14,000 from the Russian Red Cross society, of which the dowager czarina is protectress; $2,000 from the czar and $1,000 from the czarewitch.

The Finns are agreeably astonished at the fact that the imperial gifts and the Russian contributions through the official St. Petersburg committee, organized by Interior Minister Von Plehwe, with Admiral Craemer as chairman, were sent to the Finnish committee instead of the governor, Gen. Bobrikoff. The governor, however, is receiving the funds collected by the Novoe Vremya.

All this is regarded as significant, since Gen. Bobrikoff in his official organ declared that justice demanded that in the distribution of the governmental funds decided preference must be given to the communities whose inhabitants obeyed the military service decree. The Finlanders regard this as tantamount to an admission that the money passing through Bobrikoff's hands is used against the Finnish cause.

The total funds at the disposition of the Finnish committee, including $49,000 which remained from the previous famine fund, amounts to $181,000. Owing to the demoralization caused by the money distribution at the time of the last famine, the committee restricts help, excepting the extreme cases, to the distribution of food stuffs, seed and materials for cottage industries, as loans or in return for work.

In some cases, on the advice of the agricultural experts who have been sent throughout the country, small loans of money for farm improvements are granted, on the condition that if the improvements are actually made the committee will cancel the debt if 50 per cent of it is repaid by 1906. Needy school children are housed, clothed, boarded and instructed free. The committee's accounts are audited by the Bank of Finland, and are regularly published in the newspapers, separate from the provincial funds and the senate appropriation which are used for building roads and canals for drainage purposes.

Week of Shakespeare.

LONDON, Feb. 7.—(Copyright)—F. R. Benson's Shakespearian company will twice in the week perform a cycle of historical plays, "Richard the Third," both parts of "Henry IV.," "Henry V." and "The Merry Wives of Windsor." All the properties and scenes for these performances will be scrupulously right.

SECOND-HAND CLOTHIER OFFERS KING'S CAST-OFFS

LONDON, Feb. 7.—(Copyright.)—A kindly and thoughtful act on the part of the king has had unexpected results. At the recent sale of the London Needlework guild his majesty sent a large number of articles from his own wardrobe to be sold for the benefit of the poor.

It seems that a second-hand clothier became possessed of some of these goods, and is now displaying them in his window, labelled "Lately Worn by King Edward VII." The Tailor and Cutter says:

"His majesty is not of a size and shape that would render his clothes particularly good sellers, but, on the other hand, his garments are invariably well made and of good material. As we do not suppose that in the majority of cases they have been subjected to much hard wear, they would probably fetch a good price."

WORK OF VANDALS

Art Treasures in Hampton Court Seem to Have Been Damaged by Deliberate Act.

LONDON, Feb. 7.—(Copyright.)—Art treasures at Hampton court have suffered of late through wanton outrages committed by unknown persons. One of the tapestries in the Horn room, adjoining the great hall of the palace, has been considerably damaged by a knife.

The damaged tapestry is in the center of one of three old Flemish pieces, enclosed with an old carved oak railing. The cut is very clean, of semi-circular shape, and is some six inches in extent, completely penetrating the tapestry.

Recently two valuable paintings by Holbein and Kneller were damaged, and some time before that a handsome brass lock in the state apartments was divested of its scrollwork.

MARCONI SYSTEM TO ENCIRCLE EARTH

LONDON, Feb. 7.—The court today granted the Marconi company leave to amend its memorandum of association as to enable it to cope with what counsel described as "potentialities beyond the dreams of science." In support of the application counsel casually mentioned that Marconi expected shortly to encircle the earth with wireless messages and hoped to apply his system to heating, traction and to publishing daily newspapers on board ship.

PRINCE OF MONACO'S FAD SETS PARIS ALL AGOG

Lectures About Oceanography, but Admits He Knows Nothing About It.

[SPECIAL CABLE TO THE GAZETTE.]
(Copyright, 1903, by New York Herald Co.)

PARIS, Feb. 7.—A couple of fine days has helped Parisians to endure the prevailing mugginess. It is hard to realize that blizzards are prevailing in Southern France, while light overcoats are the rule on the boulevards.

Paris is rather indifferent to the weather, for it has a new fad. We have swung from the dizzy "kakevache," the latest version of the word, into the mysterious depths of "oceanography." The prince of Monaco's lectures on this complex subject are attracting swarms of fair Parisiennes, who, I rather fancy, are moved by a charitable desire to discover the secret of bringing sardines back to the Brittany coast.

But the profound science of the prince is baffled by the problem. He urges the French government to follow the American example and establish a government department for the study and preservation of sea fisheries. The prince laughs at a scheme gravely propounded by the Temps for catching the porpoises, who devour the sardines, and making shoe laces of their hides.

OLDEST PARIS STREET IS TO BE DESTROYED

PARIS, Feb. 7.—(Copyright.)—A grand clearance for the new school of medicine means the destruction of the remaining houses in the Rue Ecole de Medicine and the disappearance of the oldest street in Paris. It existed in the time of Lutetia, as a Roman road, and in the thirteenth century was called Rue des Cordelles. At the time of the revolution the name was Rue Murat. Other alterations in the same quarter have caused the demolition of the remains of the celebrated Harcourt college.

American Consul Dead.

PARIS, Feb. 7.—Consul General Gowdy has been informed that John H. Carroll, United States consul at Cadiz, Spain, died today of consumption, at Mentone, where he was on leave of absence.

RULERS OF THE WORLD.

Meat Eating Nations Are the Leaders in Every Branch of Human Achievement.

The ruling nations of the world are meat eaters and history records that they always have been.

Vegetarians and food cranks may explain this in any way they choose, but the facts remain that the Americans, English, French, Russians and Germans are meat eating nations, and they are also the most energetic and most progressive.

The principal food of the heroic Boer soldier known as Biltong, is a sort of dried beef, affording a great deal of nourishment in a highly concentrated form.

The weak races of people are the rice eating Chinese, Hindoos and Siamese, regarded since the dawn of history as non-progressive, superstitious and inferior physically and mentally to the meat eating nations who dominate them.

The structure of the teeth plainly indicates that human beings should subsist upon a variety of food, meat, fruit and grains, and it is unhygienic to confine one's diet to any one of these classes to the exclusion of another.

Meat is the most concentrated and most easily digested of foods, but our manner of living is often so unnatural that the digestive organs refuse to properly digest meat, eggs and similar nutritious and wholesome food, but it is not because such food is unwholesome, but the real reason is that the stomach lacks, from disease or weakness, some necessary digestive element; hence arising indigestion and later on, chronic dyspepsia.

Nervous people should eat plenty of meat, convalescents should make meat the principal food, hard working people have to do so and brain workers and office men should eat, not so much meat but at least once a day and to insure its perfect digestion, one or two of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets should be taken after each meal, because they supply the peptones, diastase and fruit acids, lacking in every case of stomach trouble.

Nervous dyspepsia, catarrh of stomach, gastritis, sour stomach, gas and acidity are only different names for indigestion, the failure to digest wholesome food, and the use of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets cures them all, because by affording perfect digestion the stomach has a chance to rest and recover its natural tone and vigor.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the real household medicine; it is as safe and pleasant for the stomach ache of the baby as it is for the imperfect digestion of its grandsire.

They are not a cathartic, but a digestive, and no pill habit can ever follow their use; the only habit Stuart's Tablets induce is the habit of good digestion and consequently good health.

ANOTHER WEEK OF THE GREAT FREE EXHIBITION

Prof. Schurr's wonderful exhibition of naturally mounted birds, insects, reptiles and butterflies will remain another week. While the exhibition is a great expense to us, we feel that the appreciation has been so great and the interest taken by those interested in nature's wonders so keen, that we have induced the Professor to remain another week. We believe that, although in this exhibition there is absolutely no gain to us, we are furthering the educational tendencies of this community and therefore extend a kind invitation to everybody to visit the same. Entrance to the exhibition is both through our Fifth avenue and Market street stores.

ROSENBAUM COMPANY

THE WOMAN'S STORE ~ EASILY REACHED BY ALL CARS

Announcement

Please remember that our stores will open at 8:15 A. M. in the future, and close at 5:30 P. M. except Saturday.

Although our advertisements are filled with bargain news of a most unusual kind, great quantities of fine new spring goods are here for your selection.

GREAT ALTERATION SALE

This sale is a great success. It could not be otherwise with the prices we name. We cannot afford to sit idly by and see thousands of dollars' worth of goods soiled because of the great alterations taking place incident to putting in our great new silk and dress goods departments. We must sell the goods—no matter how desirable or salable they are. We're the under man in this case, these tremendous changes that will raise clouds of dust and mountains of dirt are threatening us. It's no matter that will allow waiting. We must act immediately. We close our eyes to price—not from choice either. And now, more bargains!

Greatest Ribbon Bargains in Years

And here is the greatest ribbon bargain that we have offered for a long time. Every season the foremost Manufacturer of finest silk ribbons in the country sends to us his loom starts. These are always cut off when the loom begins to run perfect and smooth and while he does not call these ribbons perfect, you could never detect anything wrong with them. Remember, there are no better ribbons made than these—they come in every color, as well as black and white, and we think they are great bargains indeed.

A GOOD RECORD IN ORGANIZING

Result of the Work of Strengthening Unions in This District.

WILL CONTINUE EFFORTS

Fully Two Thousand New Members Were Added to the Roll of Union Men in the Pittsburgh District in One Month.

During the month ending yesterday 2,000 men have been added to the union list in the Pittsburgh district. This is the record made by the organizers who began work here assisted by local labor leaders on January 7. They were John J. Keegan of Philadelphia and A. C. Cartwright of Chicago, general organizers of the American Federation of Labor, John Devlin of Toledo, first vice president of the Allied Metal Mechanics, William Kennedy of Washington, D. C., general organizer of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and P. J. Conlin of Cleveland, first vice president of the International Association of Machinists. The visitors were assisted by William A. Shaw, business agent of the Pittsburgh district of the International Association of Machinists, and Thomas H. Flynn, general organizer of the American Federation of Labor. Conlin and Devlin left during the week but the work is being vigorously continued by others. Devlin was called to his home on business of his organization and Conlin started on an organizing tour which will include Oil City, Corry, Jamestown, and end at Cleveland.

The machinists were specially benefited by the work of the last few weeks. Three new lodges were formed, one at Washington, Pa., one at Monongahela City and the other at Wilkinsburg. Besides every lodge in the district was strengthened. Lodge No. 82 being particularly benefited. The membership of this lodge was doubled, the new members coming from the Westinghouse works. The new lodges composed exclusively of German machinists are being formed and will be perfected at the next meeting, one at Braddock on February 11 and the other on the South side on February 18. The meetings will be held at No. 216 Sixth street. Two new lodges of metal mechanics also were formed here, one of pipe makers and one of drill-press hands.

Various Crafts Organized.

A local union of inside electricians composed of employes of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Co. was organized and will be attached to the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. The meeting place has not been definitely decided upon but will be either at Wilkinsburg or East Pittsburgh. Organizations also have been formed of ship carpenters, boilermakers, boilermakers' helpers, leather-workers on horse goods, pile-drivers and building trades laborers. The latter were organized by Thomas H. Flynn on Tuesday night, when over 400 laborers were taken in, and it is expected that this number will be doubled at the next meeting. All the new organizations have been granted charters by the American Federation of Labor. Other bodies affiliated with the federation, particularly the Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners and Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers, have greatly strengthened their different local unions within the past month.

Labor leaders desire it to be understood that the active work now being done is not in preparation for a strike or disturbance of any kind but merely to make Pittsburgh, which is now the industrial center of the country, also the stronghold of organized labor. It has been pointed out that strikes and labor troubles decrease as organizations gain in strength. There was a less number of strikes in the Pittsburgh district last year than in previous years. John Stafford in mentioning the benefits of labor unions says they abolish work in tenement houses, lessen accidents, oppose contract labor, lessen importation of labor, abolish the truck system, protect property, punish strikes and have an educational influence on members. In speaking of strikes he says: "When trades are not organized into permanent unions the grievances they are obliged to put up with often cause great irritation and long, disastrous strikes. When they are well organized they are avoided in nearly all cases."

No Trouble in Sight.

From present indications there will be but few disagreements between employer and employe when the existing wage scales expire. The local unions of the Journeymen Bricklayers and Masons International union have already notified the contractors that they will make no demand for an increase in wages when the present scale expires on April 30. The Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers is determined to get an increase for the painters. The scale expires on February 28. Last year when a demand was made for 45 cents an hour the master painters refused to concede the rate on the ground that they had not been given sufficient notice and a compromise was made at 40 cents an hour. A similar excuse will not be available this year as the union gave six months notice of the intention to demand a rate of 45 cents an hour. During the year the Union has been strengthened and extended to surrounding towns and there are but few unorganized painters in the Pittsburgh district. The master painters have declared that the advance will not be granted and it would be difficult to make a prediction as to the probable result. The tile layers are now on a strike for increased pay and the delay in reaching a settlement is due to the fact that there is but little work at present in that line. An adjustment of the differences is expected this week. The policy of the United States Steel Corporation in continuing prices in many important lines for another year likely will prevent any disturbance in the iron and steel industry. So far as known the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers will make no demand for an increase in the wage scales when the annual convention is held in Columbus in April.

IS STILL GROWING

Ft. Pitt Lodge of Machinists Adding New Members to Its Roll—Will Hold a Reception.

Fort Pitt lodge No. 228, International Association of Machinists, of Allegheny, held its regular meeting last Tuesday evening. One new member was admitted and six applications were acted on, which makes the membership nearly the 300 mark. They had as guest the first vice president of the order, P. J. Conlon. This lodge has a hustling set of officers.

It will hold the first annual reception on Monday evening, February 9, in Columbia hall, Pike and Chestnut streets, Allegheny. The committee is composed of John Theis, H. L. Fullerton, John Nebolt, Clarence Dice, Alexander McInnis and H. R. Ranalin, which guarantees a good time to all.

Woman and Her Clubs

MISS ANNE HOLINGSWORTH WHARTON, a former Pittsburger, and historian of the National Society, Colonial Dames of America, has issued her annual report of the work of the society, a great deal of which is interesting to the general public. Among the commemoration celebration is noted that of the Connecticut Society, which celebrated the founding of Yale College by putting up a monument on the village green at Branford, to mark the spot where the ten founders brought their books for the purpose of establishing a college in the colony. The society is now trying to buy the house of the Rev. Henry Whitfield, at Guilford, said to be the oldest colonial house in New England. The Pennsylvania society has restored and furnished Stenson, the house erected in 1728 by James Logan, secretary to William Penn. Washington, Madison, Jefferson and other colonial dignitaries were entertained in this house. In North Carolina the old church of St. Philip, on Cape Fear river, which dates back to a period many years before the revolution, has been secured. From all over the United States valuable trees have been sent to adorn the Roger Williams Park, which is in the care of the Colonial Dames of Rhode Island. Nearly all the state societies have entered into the plan of offering prizes for school and college essays on colonial subjects. In Massachusetts the prizes go to students in women's colleges; in Pennsylvania they go to the high schools; in West Virginia to the six normal schools, and so on. Apropos of this report of national work is the announcement that the Pennsylvania State Society has decided to appoint a standing committee to consist of members living in Pittsburgh, Allegheny, Sewickley, Shield, Monongahela and Erie. This committee will meet at Mrs. F. B. Nimick's next Tuesday for organization and will at that time elect its own chairman and secretary.

The Pittsburgh Architectural club at its regular meeting on last Wednesday night was addressed by Mr. Steele, formerly of Chicago, on "The Work and Personality of Louis Sullivan, Architect," one of the most brilliant and interesting men in architecture today. The club's annual exhibition will be held late in the spring, arrangements for which will be completed in a few days.

There was a board meeting of the western branch of the Consumers' league on Wednesday with Miss Eliza D. Armstrong, president of the league, in the chair. A great deal of practical work for the coming year was decided upon and committees were appointed. The committee on year books includes Miss Jane Robb Murdoch, Miss Jane Bradley and Mrs. W. L. Pierce and the committee to have charge of the rules governing the white list of shops in and about Pittsburgh includes Mrs. Mattie Patterson, chairman, Miss Jamison, Mrs. Taylor Allerdice, Mrs. J. W. Coleberry, Mrs. Samuel S. Miller, Mrs. W. A. Black and Miss Stevenson. It is of interest to league members to note that the half-past-five closing movement has been successful among several of the shops and that the system in Joseph Horne's, Boggs & Buhl's, Horne & Stewart's, the Pittsburgh Dry Goods company and Rosenbaum's will go into effect this week. While this result has not been brought about directly by the league, the merchants having come to the decision of their own free will, it is nevertheless gratifying to the women interested in work which runs on parallel lines to that of early closing of shops. The new system will benefit upwards of 7,000 employes who will be able to go home in slightly less crowded cars, have dinner at a reasonable hour and have time to prepare for the evening. It is not now such a far cry to five-o'clock closing—the desideratum in the world of shop people. It is to be hoped the system will hold out successfully. Not long ago, in New York, a shop whose management is noted for consideration of its employes, put into force a similar closing arrangement. Several customers of prominence, who, as it happened, were of the utterly selfish and arrogant order, accidentally made trips to the store after the newly established closing hour. Shortly afterward they complained in a body to the managers saying that if their convenience was of no more consideration than that of the employes they would withdraw their accounts and would, furthermore, boycott the store among their acquaintances. And the management knew that they would and that their loss would be heavily felt, so the store being in business for gain and not for philanthropy, returned to its six-o'clock closing. In Pittsburgh, however, it seems that there are too many prominent women interested in the discomfort of workers for the selfishness of a few to check a laudable reform.

✣✣✣✣

The attendance at the meeting on Wednesday of the Woman's club of Knoxville was unusually large and the program was an excellent one. It included papers by Miss Brooks on "Confucius" and a biographical sketch of Herbert Spencer by Mrs. Twitmyer.

✣✣✣✣

Professor Charles Zeublin gave another in his series of talks before the Women's club of Sewickley valley on Wednesday last at its meeting in the Edgeworth club. The address was notably good as it dealt with "Social Organization," in which the speaker confined himself principally to the national, state and municipal government organizations. The lecture was preceded by a luncheon given by Mrs. DeWitt B. Nettleton and followed by a chafing dish supper given by Miss D'Oller.

✣✣✣✣

The Tourist club meeting last Monday was rendered interesting not only by a bright program and attractive music, but by the presence of Mrs. Harry McCloy of Reading, one of the early members of the club, who gave a short though interesting talk. The topic of the day was Greenland and Mrs. Franklin Searl, who frequently gives her papers in verse, opened the program with some original verses on "Greenland Eskimos." Other good papers were "The Old Norse Colony of Greenland," a review by Miss Baird; "Glaciers," by Miss Tillie Schleiter, and some very interesting "Legends and Folk Lore of the Norse," given by Miss McDermott. Miss Tillie Schleiter and Miss Ella Day gave a good musical program.

Mrs. James B. Oliver of Ridge avenue, Allegheny, who was appointed a delegate to the National convention of the Daughters of the American Revolution has withdrawn from the congress as she and Mr. Oliver, with their daughters Miss Amelia Oliver and Miss Edith Oliver, left last week on a trip to Mexico.

Notices are being sent to the presidents of the various women's clubs requesting them to appoint delegates to the meetings of the joint committee of women's clubs of Pittsburgh and vicinity. The first meeting will be held Friday, February 20, at the Twentieth Century club and fortnightly meetings will be held thereafter until the committee begins actual work in midsummer. Each women's club in Pittsburgh and the surrounding towns appoints two delegates and two alternates to attend the meetings and these delegates form the joint committee of women's clubs, with Miss Beulah Kennard as general chairman.

Possibly Marconi himself knows little more about his wonderful invention than do the members of the Woman's club and a few of their friends asked to hear Prof. Samuel M. Kinter's lecture on wireless telegraphy given last Tuesday afternoon. Prof. Kinter possesses the rare gift of explaining himself and his subject in a thorough manner and in doing so in an easy, fluent way with a noticeable absence of bewildering technicalities. In his talk last week he went into the details of the greatest discovery of the day, showing the development of the system, explaining the workings of the instruments used on land and sea to transmit messages by means of the ether waves. Wireless telegraphy, in its present state, is only practicable for signaling between light house and sea connections, apart, of course, from its wonderful transatlantic achievements. All possible efforts will, for the future, be directed toward the development of the system for land service. Prof. Kinter's suggestion that he give a practical illustration of how the messages are transmitted at an early date was eagerly received by the club. The lecture altogether was of the greatest advantage to the hearers as it is almost impossible for one to grasp in all its details, the wonderful scientific discoveries of the day, even by close and conscientious reading. The illustrations and the very instruments of the system themselves as exhibited by the speaker, left the hearers with a definite impression of the invention. Mrs. Anthony W. Smith, Jr., was leader for the day. At the close of the lecture a delightful musical program was given by Leon von der Heim, one of the first violins of the Pittsburgh Orchestra, who played, among other things, an aria by Tartini and "Serenade" by Pierne.

Mrs. Lawrence Litchfield was director of the Tuesday Musical club at its last meeting this week held at "The Maples." The care with which the programs of the club are arranged and the excellent musical taste displayed in the selection of numbers always makes the meetings enjoyable. The club, moreover, represents the best amateur talent in Pittsburgh, which, when one considers the musical heights to which Pittsburgh is rising, is saying a great deal. The opening number, Chopin's "Scherzo in B minor," was given by Miss Etta Bender, and a double number by Minetti, including his "Daemmerung" and "Lied das Maedchen," by Mrs. McKennan, followed. Miss Nellie Bender contributed Vieuxtemps' "Adagia," from concerto in A, and Mrs. Clarke gave a Schubert-Liszt number, "Du bist die Ruh." Miss Hamilton sang two of Clayton Johns' songs, "I Gave My Love Three Roses Red" and "I Love and the World is Mine," and Miss Murdoch contributed Sinding's "Fruehlingsrauschen." Ellen Wright's "The Parting Hour" and "Spring Again" were sung by Miss Ellis, and Miss McNally played Rubenstein's "Fifth Barcarolle in A minor." Mrs. Makinson sang "The Thorn," by Wallace, and "Sans Toi," by D'Hardelot, and the closing number, "Valse Paraphrase" (Apres Chopin), was given by Miss Evelyn Lippa, accompanied by Mrs. Kate Ockleston Lippa.

✣✣✣✣

The topic of the Lawrenceville New Century club, at a meeting held last Tuesday, was the "Elizabethan Age," with Miss Katharine Hoerr as leader. The feature of the afternoon was a fine paper on Shakespeare, given by Miss Hoerr, while other good papers were "Kenilworth Castle," by Miss Carrie Ziegler, and "Queen Elizabeth and Her Contemporaries" and "The Spanish Armada," both of which were given by Miss Anna Herron. Miss H. Elizabeth Cory, one of the most active members of the club, gave a good ex'empore address on "Exploration and Colonization," a subject which was to have been discussed by Mrs. H. B. Ingersoll. During the business portion of the meeting, conducted by Mrs. J. J. Covert, resolutions were formulated asking for a larger state appropriation for rural libraries, the Lawrenceville branch of the library being of untold value to the club in its work.

✣✣✣✣

The Ben Avon Woman's club is studying art this year and at a meeting held last Tuesday at the home of Mrs. F. A. Schmucker in Ridge avenue, Ben Avon, the topic of the afternoon was "The Art of Florence," Mrs. Thomas G. Evans read a paper on the subject of the day, and Miss Knox, a niece of Attorney-General P. C. Knox, gave an interesting talk on many places of interest she has visited during her European travels. At the next meeting of the club, to be held at the home of Miss Knox, Miss Sackett of the Pittsburgh Carnegie library will speak on "The Home Library."

✣✣✣✣

A very sensible discussion on "The Craze for New Books" added much to the interest of the meeting of the Colonial club, held last Tuesday at the Hotel Schenley. Mrs. M. L. McRoberts was the leader of the discussion, in which the members of the club unanimously announced their opinion in favor of the older and more tried books. Under the head of "Current Topics" the club discussed Kipling's work at length, Mrs. G. B. Kellogg acting as leader. Mrs. Bryce Ray read a good sketch of "Gutenberg" which had been deferred from the previous meeting. At the business session Mrs. Sarah Watson was elected to membership.

✣✣✣✣

A splendid little musicale was given Tuesday evening at the meeting of the Professional Women's club by Mrs. Adah Sampson Thomas and her daughter, Miss Adelaide Thomas. Mrs. Edith Harris Scott and Miss Augusta Abel. The meeting was held at Westminster school in Aiken avenue, with Miss Lynne president of the club, as hostess. She was assisted by the entertainment committee of the club, including Mrs. William F. Abel, Miss Estelle McCloskey, Mrs. Thomas, Miss Kelly and Miss Lois Rankin.

The Tenement Improvement Co. has issued its prospectus, and it gives some information thoughtful philanthropists may well stop to consider. The organization is modeled after the Octavia Hill Association, of Philadelphia, and was formed for the betterment of the housing of the poor of Pittsburgh for the following reasons:

First—There is no tenement house commissioner in Pittsburgh.

Second—Laws relating to the water supply, sewerage, garbage collecting, overcrowding and use of houses for immoral purposes are either not in existence or are not enforced.

Third—There are within a radius of 25 miles of Pittsburg: 35,000 Slavs, 4,000 Bohemians, 30,000 Poles, 10,000 Croatians, 8,000 Ruthenians, 1,000 Russians, 2,000 Servians, 35,000 Italians; these low-class foreigners must of necessity overcrowd the already congested districts.

Fourth—Conditions such as these make for moral and physical contagion, intemperance, pauperism, crime, anarchy and the destruction of the homes.

✣✣✣✣

The members of the Women's club of Western Pennsylvania are to hold a mid-winter conference on the 10th of this month, at a place yet to be announced.

✣✣✣✣

An event of first importance for Tuesday evening for all those interested in bettering the condition of the poor is now being anticipated—the opening exercises of the Peacock public baths of the Columbian council school. The exercises are announced for next Tuesday evening at the school, No. 1835 Centre avenue. The Rev. Dr. Robert Christie, of the Western Theological seminary; the Rev. J. Leonard Levy, and the donor, Alexander R. Peacock, will make addresses.

A meeting of the educational department of the Civic Club will be held in the club room, No. 515 Market street, next Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock.

The members of the Fruit and Flower mission met on Friday to further arrangements for the benefit entertainment they hope to have early in the spring. The mission is badly in need of funds and hopes that an entertainment, theatrical or otherwise, will solve the question of financing the organization for a period at least. There are so many demands on the treasury from the very poor, people who upon investigation, have been found worthy, that liberal private contributions have been insufficient. The entertainment is projected to remedy this deficit for a time at least. The mission does not often come before the public, except to offer help to hospitals and many worthy poor people, which is done daily. If this work is to be continued with success its proposed entertainment must be liberally patronized.

A new patriotic organization entitled Daughters of Patriots is now being much discussed. To be eligible to membership one must be able to trace her ancestry back through five grandfathers of the same name in an unbroken line. On account of the difficulty in obtaining records, etc., admission to the society is anything but an easy task, and there are only 16 members in the United States. Mrs. F. B. Nimick, of the East End, is one of the 16, and it will be her pleasant duty to attend a meeting of the society while she is in Washington City this month attending a meeting of the National Congress D. D., a meeting of the Patriots having been arranged for the same time. At this meeting Mrs. Nimick will present Mrs. John A. Harper's name for membership. Mrs. Nimick and Mrs. Harper will leave for Washington City on the night of February 20.

Sixth—Pittsburgh, in proportion to its wealth and prosperity, has done nothing to improve the housing conditions of the poor.

The purpose of the company is to build or remodel tenements in the worst localities, put them in sanitary condition, install tenants of moral character at the same rents paid before and have weekly visits of inspection made by women rent collectors. The company will agree to manage on these same lines, tenement houses for property holders on commission. Among the first subscribers for the stock are James H. Park, the Rev. A. W. Arundel, D. D., Mrs. Cortlandt Whitehead, Mrs. J. L. Koethen, Miss G. E. Gormley, Charles McKnight, Mrs. Carroll Fitzhugh, Miss Helen Fuller, the Rev. L. W. Mason, Mrs. J. H. Anderson, C. F. Holdship, T. H. B. McKnight, Miss Rena Sharpe, Miss M. E. Bakewell, Miss Harriet Schoyer, Miss A. S. Phillips, Miss G. A. Gormley, Miss Margaret Phillips, Miss Holdship, Mrs. Charles E. Clapp, Mrs. F. T. F. Lovejoy, Mrs. Samuel F. Grier, Mrs. George A. Gormley, Mrs. A. M. Imbrie, Mrs. Emmett Queen, Mrs. Charles L. Taylor, George O. Morgan, Miss Eleanor Park, Mrs. James I. Buchanan, Miss M. J. Boardman, Miss Priscilla Guthrie, Mrs. D. G. Stewart, Miss Clara Hussey, John Bakewell, Jr., D. E. Park, Starling Winston Childs, William H. Matthews and Mrs. Joseph F. Guffey.

Very pretty invitation cards, printed in blue and decorated with the insignia of the society, have been issued by the Pittsburgh Chapter, Daughter of the American Revolution, inviting members and friends to the chapter's annual celebration of Washington's birthday, which, according to the old calendar, will be celebrated on the 11th of February—next Wednesday. Conservatory Hall, Dithridge street, will be the scene of the event, and the address of the occasion will be made by Dr. Everett T. Tomlinson, on "George Washington, the Man." The hour is 2.30 o'clock. The chapter has asked to participate in the occasion, the members of the graduating classes of the Pittsburgh, Allegheny and Sewickley High schools and the members of the John Hart Chapter, Children of the American Revolution.

The bi-monthly meeting of the Pittsburgh Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, was held at the Twentieth Century Club on Friday morning, and in many respects was one of the most interesting and important of the year. Mrs. Ammon, the regent, presided, and Mrs. George A. Lewis, acted as secretary in the absence of Miss Guffey, who was ill. The registrar, Mrs. Joseph W. Marsh, reported that the papers of the following applicants had been accepted by the national board: Mrs. Lovene C. Dickey, Mrs. Annabelle E. McLain, Mrs. Mary D. Wilson, Mrs. Agnes C. Graff, Miss M. Emma Guffey (Mrs. Carroll Miller), Miss Mary R. Moorhead, Mrs. Nettie H. G. Beemer, Mrs. Margaret L. K. Asklin, Mrs. Minnie B. Prichard, Mrs. Carrie S. Lawrence, Miss Mabel Miller — also by transfer from the Irondequoit Chapter, Rochester, N. Y., Miss Florence W. Brown. In the place of a report by the historian a most interesting paper on "Colonel Bouquet," written by Mrs. William M. Darlington and prepared from data and certified copies of letters and papers secured by the late William M. Darlington in the library of the British Museum; was read by Miss Darlington. The chapter unanimously accepted the recommendation of the board of management that the entertainment to be given in November next in honor of the Pennsylvania Daughters of the American Revolution, who will hold the annual state conference in Pittsburgh, shall be a concert by the Pittsburgh Orchestra, Mr. Herbert, conductor, in Carnegie Music Hall, the date for the hall having already been secured. The presentation of matters of interest pertaining to the Continental Congress by the delegates from the chapter closed the meeting.

✣✣✣✣

The Beethoven Heroic Symphony was the piece de resistence of the Orchestra program this week. It is a mighty undertaking, but Mr. Herbert succeeded in giving it a fairly impressive interpretation. Barring a slight tendency to exaggeration of expression it was a thoughtful, dignified performance, but the instruments were hardly up to their usual standard. The strings were scratchy and the wood wind choir not so melodious as it should have been, and the brasses—but there, we are tired of using the hammer on the brasses. Although it is heresy to say so, this symphony would be more popular with the average audience if it were not so long. Those who are not burning with musical enthusiasm are apt to grow a trifle restive under so much undiluted classicism. In the Liszt number the orchestra played with much more pleasant tone. This is a spirited expression of the poetic feeling with which this work is embued. If the horns had not been flat, and had not purred—there is no other word for it—so exerably, the instrumentation would have been fine. It was a good number, anyway.

✣✣✣✣

Henri Merck, the soloist, has for three seasons occupied the position of first violonceilist with the orchestra, and for three seasons has been heard here as soloist. He is an artist of distinction, and his playing stands for a wonderful beauty of tone, and a faultless technique. One of his numbers was a composition of Fritz Stahlberg's, one of the first violins of the orchestra, and proved to be a delicious little musical whimsicality.

✣✣✣✣

Harry Lee Cornwall, organist of St. Peter's Episcopal Church, will give the eighteenth recital of the Sunday series this evening at 7:15. The program will include:

Adagio ..... Fr. Liszt
Prelude and Fugue in G Major. F. Mendelssohn
Litany ..... Fr. Schubert
"O, Rest in the Lord," (Elijah) F. Mendelssohn
Grand Chorus (on a Gregorian tone) A. Guilmant

Next Friday evening the annual promenade of the junior class, Western University of Pennsylvania, will be held in the ball room of the Hotel Schenley, and is being anticipated with uncommon interest by the students of the university and their friends. In former years the junior prom. has been held in the college gymnasium, which has always been large enough to accommodate all who were asked. This year the invitation list grew and grew, grew clear out of the gymnasium capacity and the ball room of the Schenley had to be secured to accommodate the guests. A number of prominent men and women, headed by Mr. and Mrs. John A. Brashear, will act as patrons and patronesses and will receive the guests.

PITTSBURGHER TELLS OF MRS. TINGLEY'S TRIAL

The Purple Mother of the Theosophic Cult in a Courtroom.

By CARA REESE.

Many Tilts at Repartee With Lawyers of the Opposition.

A VIVID pen picture of some of the scenes and incidents in court during the recent celebrated case of Katherine Tingley, "Outer Head of the Order of Universal Brotherhood" versus a California newspaper, was an entertaining introduction to the regular program of the Pittsburgh Woman's club on Tuesday. The description and comments were contributed as club news by Mrs. Ida L. Easton, the president, who is now in San Diego, Cal. For three weeks the Pittsburgh woman faithfully attended the trial, until, she avers, she felt for all the world like one of Dickens's characters in Chancery. The trial was the only topic of conversation in San Diego and vicinity for days, and when at last the argument opened and clever lawyers from New York and California began to speak, the superior court room was packed to suffocation, half the town was turned away and excitement both indoors and out reached a climax.

Mrs. Tingley has a number of followers in Pittsburgh who are in full sympathy with her peculiar conduct and views. She was prominently discussed in local club circles, also, at the time of the detention in New York city some months since of a number of Cuban children en route from their home to "The School of Philosophy and Theosophy," a settlement at Point Loma, Cal., of which she is the organizer and manager.

She is the acknowledged successor of the late Madam Blavatsky by the majority of theosophists, according to claim, particularly those of the faith who are lined along the Pacific coast. Like Madam Blavatsky, Mrs. Easton says, this strange woman has been trying to lift the darkness from theosophical construction by taking the best from each form of religion the world has ever known and building therewith an institution familiarly known as a new School of Thought.

Visited by Pittsburgh Woman.

The outward or visible "school," it may be said in passing, was visited some months ago by Mrs. Charles I. Wade, the noted club leader of this city, who says that the buildings that compose it occupy the choicest land site on the coast. Both buildings and grounds compel admiration. Mrs. Wade says, but as to methods and practices in the life and routine of the institution, only the initiated may speak. Much of this, however, was revealed in the progress of the trial of which Mrs. Easton entertainingly writes.

The suit pending was for libel, with the damages set for $50,000 and based on an article published in a California newspaper which purported to lift the veil from the mysteries practiced at Point Loma.

On her first visit to the court, Mrs. Easton says, she found Mrs. Tingley on the witness stand undergoing cross examination. She is described as a large woman with three pendulous chins and dressed in the latest feminine style. She used a crutch conspicuously by always resting her arm next to the jury upon it for support.

Robed in Purple.

Mr. Shortridge, the famous lawyer of San Francisco, was questioning her in regard to the garb worn at Point Loma and drew from her the admissions that she, herself, donned a royal purple robe while administering the rites, and her slaves wore an earth brown Greek dress after the style of that worn in Alexandria by the followers of Hypatia, mathematician and philosopher and finally one of the martyrs of Paganism. Later, however, Mrs. Easton says, this interesting plaintiff strenuously objected to the defence alluding to her students as slaves or as deluded followers.

Mrs. Tingley was put through a rigid examination in mythology at this point, Mrs. Easton says, and the tangle resulting from a mixup of ancient philosophy and mythology not only showed lack of knowledge in some essentials, but afforded much food for reflection and amusement. Any attempt, however, to lift the veil of secrecy that shielded the plaintiff's past history was promptly opposed by her counsel and was always sustained by the court. All that anyone in San Diego seemed to know was that Mrs. Tingley had come to Point Loma in 1900 from New York city and had established her peculiar school with herself as the "Outer Head."

Among the accusations made, Mrs. Easton says, was that of teaching that the matrimonial tie should not be binding, that motherhood should be universal and not individual and to accomplish this infants should be isolated from the mother's care immediately after birth, allowing the free measure of mother love to sweep forth unhampered to all children and thus destroy the selfishness so pronounced at present in mothers and induce in its stead a universal feeling in all mankind.

Women's wit gained many a point in warding off these troublesome questions, Mrs. Easton says, though every once in a while the audience lost its decorum and laughed uproariously its approval. As the case progressed it gained in interest as the strange stories afloat were exploited.

Sending Thought Waves.

One of these points related to that part of the teachings at Point Loma which required students to go out to the "sacred" grounds in the early morning and send "thought waves" out into the world. In answer to the question as to this custom, Mrs. Tingley said she did believe that good thoughts were helpful, for instance, continues Mrs. Easton, she turned toward Mr. Shortridge, the lawyer for the defence, and said:

"If I had a good, pure thought I might influence even you."

"If you had a good, pure thought, madam, you might," was the lawyer's quick retort.

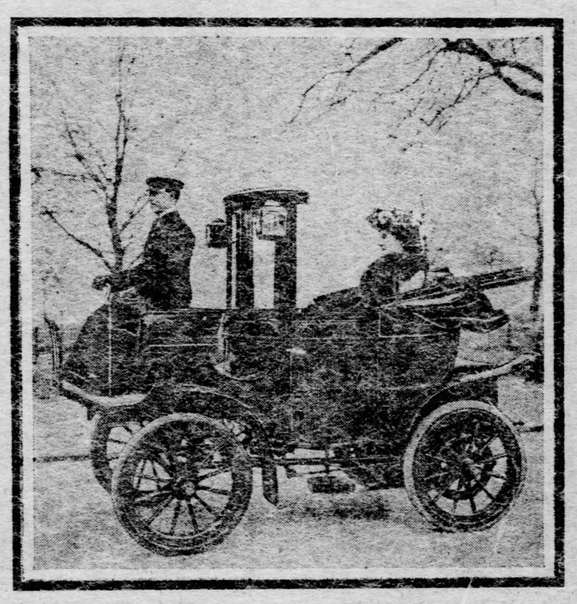
At another time when being cross-examined under the charge that she was a spiritualist and had set herself up as a reader of character, Mrs. Easton says, she turned sharply toward her questioner and said:

"For instance, Mr. Shortridge, if I looked into your face I might——"

"You will please read the characters of your own attorneys, madam," interrupted Mr. Shortridge. "I object to you using me as a subject."

Another day, Mrs. Easton continues, Mrs. Tingley arose in wrath and left the court room to sue three men for conspiracy to ruin her reputation, her damages stated as $75,000. After three weeks of trial and three days of masterpieces of oratory on the part of lawyers, in the present case the jury brought in a verdict of $7,000 damages for the plaintiff which, it said, is viewed by the theosophists as a defeat inasmuch as the claim was for over seven times that amount. The case, Mrs. Easton concludes, is one of the greatest libel suits ever fought in this country.

THE LILY LOVES HORSES BEST



Mrs. Langtry in Her Automobile.

THE latest convert to the automobile is Mrs. Langtry. She has brought her motor to this country and derives much pleasure from its possession that she has arranged for its transportation wherever she is to appear in "The Crossways."

When surprise was expressed that one so devoted to horses and the turf should care for automobiles, the English actress remarked sympathetically: "On the contrary, you escape the feeling of sorrow for the horses when they have to stand out in the cold and are ill-treated. I have called my auto Elizabeth. It ought to be feminine, for it is so erratic. But I am not bitten by the craze, and I have not lost my interest in horses. On the contrary, I am planning to bring my stable over to this country and race at the principal meetings in the east during the summer."

No more picturesque and interesting figure has appeared on the British turf during the entire history of horse racing in that right little, tight little island than "Mr. Jersey," whose colors have figured with more or less prominence in many of the most prominent events of recent years, and whose Turquoise and Fawn promise to come well to the fore in the races of this and future seasons.

Of course, every one knows that "Mr. Jersey" is the nom de course of Mrs. Langtry, and no one forgets the day when Merman, her staunch and clean limbed thoroughbred, drew away from his royal rivals and won the coveted Cesarewitch years ago.

It was more than a race that was won that day, for the king of England, then the prince of Wales, was the first to congratulate "Mr. Jersey" and his royal hand stroked the neck of the handsome horse while its owner whispered thanks and blessings into Merman's glossy ear. Mrs. Langtry, publicly restored to royal favor and winner of one of the most popular races in England, was the most envied woman in England that night.

Some of the best horses in Mrs. Langtry's stable are Bridegroom, Nobleman, Lady Rosebery and Merman. It was Merman who won for her the Cesarewitch, Jockey club cup, Goodwood cup and Gold cup at Ascot, besides many minor races.

"Possibly the most exciting events in my experience as a stable owner," declared Mrs. Langtry, "were the big races for the Jubilee cup, which Bridegroom missed by a short head and the Cesarewitch, which Merman won by a neck. Both the races were run under superb blue skies, and each race was a battle between giants of the turf, where defeat was as noble as victory was sweet and triumphant. Truly, I think one of the happiest days of my whole life was the great day of Merman's victory at Doncaster. Ah, that was a day worth paying for!

"Probably the most promising horse in my string now is Smilax. She is entered in England for the principal 3-year-old events of the coming season. I hope for great things of this filly, who has a clean record in having never been beaten in her 2-year-old races. I picked her up for £5 at a sale of yearlings. I fancy her name is a winning one, as I call her Smilax after a plant which botanists tell me is the fastest running of all American climbers.

"Many American women profess to look upon horseracing as a cruel sport. To one who loves horses as I do, racing is a humane and fascinating pastime. I have a racing box near Newmarket, and it is especially for that reason that I took up automobiling. With my new machine I can run down from London in a very short time. Some of my happiest hours are spent at Newmarket watching the foals and mares in my paddocks. I do not think the thoroughbred becomes as affectionately attached to one as the half bred, yet I could note some strong exceptions. Many of the foals I have bred have grown to know and follow me, and even on the race course have recognized me in the paddock and pulled up to sniff for thesugar they have grown to expect from me. I am fond of my new machine but no automobile in the world could make me forgo my love for horses.

Sewickley Club Notes

THE Monday Afternoon Bridge Whist club was entertained this week by Mrs. Alexander Laughlin of "Linganore," Quaker valley.

The Members' Monday Afternoon Euchre club were the guests of Miss Eleanor Dravo of Peebles and Thorn streets this week. About 40 guests were present, and the afternoon was spent at old-fashioned four-hand euchre. The prizes were won by Mrs. W. Dwight Bell, Mrs. James McKown, Miss Bessie Cunningham and Mrs. Frank Bope of Zanesville, O. Mrs. John E. Porter's guest, Miss Bessie Cunningham will entertain the club at her home in Frederick avenue next Monday.

The fifth of a series of card parties was given last Tuesday evening at the Edgeworth club, under the able management of the amusement committee, Christian L. Shannon and Charles L. Doyle. A large proportion of the members and their families enjoyed the club's hospitality on this occasion, and a pleasant evening was spent at six-hand euchre. The prize-winners were Frank Bope of Zanesville, Mrs. Samuel F. Coie, Samuel F. Cole and J. Wallis Tener.

The Tuesday Night Euchre club was postponed this week on account of the card party given at the club the same evening.

The Union Aid Society of Sewickley held its regular monthly meeting at the rooms of the Young Men's Christian association on Wednesday morning. The regular business of the month was attended to, and provision made for a number of needy sick of the valley.

Prof. Charles Zueblin, B. D., of the University of Chicago delivered the fifth of a series of most interesting lectures on "The Elements and Structure of Society" before the Woman's club of Sewickley valley at their regular weekly meeting last Wednesday afternoon at the Edgeworth club. Social organization and politics were the subjects under discussion. "Social organization," said the speaker, is concerned with all associations of a public and semi-public character, which makes necessary and possible a greater effectiveness of representative institutions." In his theme he included federal and state government, political associations, civil service reform, American Protective associations, Tammany and other political machines, municipal organizations, national political parties, state government, corruption in politics, closing his lecture with this declaration: "The value of politics in this country must be judged as a means of satisfying wants, and by conformity to standards of democracy." The final lecture of the course on "Culture" will not be delivered on a regular club day, but on Saturday, the 14th.

BEAUTY AND PURITY

Ancient and Modern Ideas on the Subject.

Time and Disease the Effacing Agents of Beauty.

What Has Science Done to Restore the Lily and the Rose?

Socrates called beauty a short-lived tyranny, Plato a privilege of nature, Theocritus a delightful prejudice, Theophrastus a silent cheat, Carneades a solitary kingdom, Homer a glorious gift of nature, Ovid a favor of the gods. Aristotle affirmed that beauty was better than all the letters of recommendation in the world, and yet none of these distinguished authorities has left us even a hint of how beauty is to be perpetuated, or the ravages of age and disease defied. Time soon blends the lily and the rose into the pallor of age, disease dots the fair face with cutaneous disfigurations and crimsons the Roman nose with unsightly flushes, moth, if not rust, corrupts the glory of eyes, teeth and lips yet beautiful by defacing the complexion, and fills the sensitive soul with agony unspeakable.

If such be the unhappy condition of one afflicted with slight skin blemishes what must be the feelings of those in whom torturing humors have for years run riot, covering the skin with scales and sores and charging the blood with poisonous elements to become a part of the system until death? It is vain to attempt to portray such suffering. Death in many cases might be considered a blessing. The blood and fluids seem to be impregnated with a fiery element which, when discharged through the pores upon the surface of the body, inflames and burns until, in his efforts for relief, the patient tears the skin with his nails, and not until the blood flows does sufficient relief come to cause him to desist.

Thus do complexional defects merge into torturing disease and piqued vanity give place to real suffering. A little wart on the nose or cheek grows to the all-devouring lupus, a patch of tetter on the palm of the hand or on the limbs suddenly envelops the body in its fiery embrace, a bruise on the leg expands into a gnawing ulcer, which reaches out its fangs to the sufferer's heart in every paroxysm of pain, a small kernel in the neck multiplies into a dozen, which eat away the vitality, great pearl-like scales grow from little rash-like inflammations in such abundance as to pass credulity; and so on may we depict the sufferings to which poor human nature is subject, all of which involve great mental distress because of personal disfigurations.

Every school girl or boy knows that if a pore in the skin in his or her face becomes clogged a little blackhead appears and surrounding it a little pimple. If a dozen pores become clogged there are a dozen blackheads and pimples. So it is with acne. In salt rheum, or, as it is technically called, eczema, the cause of the disease seems to be in the blood, from the fact that the fluids which pour out through the tubes are charged with a poisonous element that creates the most intense itching and violent inflammation and rapidly destroys the outer or scarf skin. This dreadful form of skin disease attacks all ages and may frequently be seen fully developed in infants at birth. In such cases it is often called milk crust, scald head, etc., but there is no doubt of its real nature, and that it is an inherited humor.

If there were not another external disease known, eczema would be a sufficient infliction on mankind. It pervades all classes and descends impartially through generations. While some are constantly enveloped in it, others have it confined to small patches in the ears, on the scalp, on the breast, on the palms of the hands, on the limbs, etc., but everywhere its distinctive feature is a small watery blister, which discharges an acrid fluid, causing heat, inflammation and intense itching. Ringworm, tetter, scald head, dandruff, belong to this scaly and itching order of diseases. Psoriasis, our modern leprosy, with its mother-of-pearl scale, situated on a reddened base, which bleeds upon the removal of the scale, is to be dreaded and avoided, as of old. Impetigo, barber's itch, erysipelas and a score of minor disorders make up in part the catalogue of external diseases of the skin. Thus far we have made no allusion to those afflictions which are manifestly impurities of the blood, viz.: swelling of the glands of the throat, ulcers on the neck and limbs, tumors, abscesses and mercurial poisons, with loss of hair, because the whole list can be comprehended in the one word scrofula.

It is in the treatment of torturing, disfiguring humors and affections of the skin, scalp and blood, with loss of hair, that the Cuticura remedies have achieved their greatest success. Original in composition, scientifically compounded, absolutely pure, unchangeable in any climate, always ready and agreeable to the most delicate and sensitive, they present to young and old the most successful curatives of modern times. This will be considered strong language by those acquainted with the character and obstinacy of blood and skin humors, but it is justified by innumerable successes where all the remedies and methods in vogue have failed to cure, and, in many cases, to relieve, even.

The Cuticura treatment is at once agreeable, speedy, economical and comprehensive. Bathe the affected parts freely with hot water and Cuticura Soap to cleanse the surface of crusts and scales and soften the thickened cuticle. Dry without hard rubbing and apply Cuticura Ointment to allay itching, irritation and inflammation and soothe and heal, and, lastly, take Cuticura Resolvent to cool and cleanse the blood. This treatment affords instant relief, permits rest and sleep in the severest forms of eczema and other itching, burning and scaly humors and points to a speedy, permanent and economical cure of torturing, disfiguring humors, eczemas, rashes and inflammations, from infancy to age, when all other remedies and the best physicians fail. The remedies constituting the Cuticura system will repay an individual scrutiny of their remarkable properties.

Cuticura Soap contains in a modified form the medicinal properties of Cuticura Ointment, the great skin cure and purest and sweetest of emollients combined with the most delicate and refreshing of flower odors. It is absolutely pure and no ingredient entering its composition is in the slightest degree dangerous or unwholesome. It purifies and invigorates the pores of the skin and imparts activity to the oil glands and tubes, thus furnishing an outlet for unwholesome matter, which, if retained, would cause pimples, blackheads, rashes, oily, mothy skin and other complexional disfigurations, as well as scalp affections and irritations, failing hair and baby rashes. Its gentle and continuous action on the natural lubricators of the skin keeps the latter transparent, soft, flexible and healthy. Hence its constant use, assisted by an occasional use of Cuticura Ointment, realizes the fairest complexion, the softest, whitest hands and the most luxuriant, glossy hair within the domain of the most advanced scientific knowledge to supply. Sale greater than the world's product of other skin soaps.

Cuticura Ointment is the most successful external curative for torturing, disfiguring humors of the skin and scalp, including loss of hair, in proof of which a single anointing with it, preceded by a hot bath with Cuticura Soap and followed in the severer cases by a full dose of Cuticura Resolvent, is sufficient to afford immediate relief in the most distressing forms of itching, burning and scaly humors, permit rest and sleep and point to a speedy cure when all other remedies fail. It is especially so in the treatment of infants and children, cleansing, soothing and healing the most distressing of infantile humors and preserving, purifying and beautifying the skin, scalp and hair.

Cuticura Ointment possesses, at the same time, the charm of satisfying the simple wants of the toilet of all ages, in caring for the skin, scalp, hair and hands far more effectually, agreeably and economically than the most expensive of toilet emollients while free from every ingredient of a doubtful or dangerous character. Its "One Night Treatment of the Hands," or "Single Treatment of the Hair," or use after athletics, cycling, golf, tennis, riding, sparring or any sport, each in connection with the use of Cuticura Soap, is sufficient evidence of this.

Of all remedies for the purification of the blood and circulating fluids, none approaches in specific medical action Cuticura Resolvent. In forty minutes after taking the first dose it may be detected by chemical analysis in the saliva, sweat, fat and blood, showing it has entered the circulating fluids and made the entire circuit of the human labyrinth. Chemical tests also show it to be present in the water in which the patient has bathed, on rising in the morning, which proves that it has become a part of those fluids which pass through the skin to the surface of the body. It neutralizes and resolves away (hence its name) scrofulous, inherited and other humors in the blood, which give rise to swelling of the glands, pains in the bones and torturing, disfiguring eruptions of the skin and scalp, with loss of hair.

Cuticura Resolvent extends its purifying influence by means of the pores to the surface of the skin (as above noted), allaying irritation, inflammation, itching and burning and soothing and healing eczematous humors. Hence its success in the treatment of distressing humors of the skin, scalp and blood, with loss of hair, which fail to be permanently cured by external remedies alone. Cuticura Resol

SOCIETY

EARLY in the week just closed it looked as if society had shut up its house and gone away visiting. Everybody seemed to be in New York, in the south, en route for Europe, or taking the much-favored West Indies trip. The outlook was for an inexpressibly dull week socially, of course. But things picked up a bit by the middle of the week and there really has been a good many places to go, particularly if one remembers to include the Pittsburgh Orchestra concerts and the Kunits Quartet Chamber Music concert. But so far as large balls, teas or weddings were concerned, snakes in Ireland were never scarcer. One engagement was announced, that of Miss Elizabeth Atwood Biggs, daughter of Mrs. George W. Biggs, of Neville street, and William Kuhn Dunbar, though this was gossiped about as early as midwinter. The date of the wedding has not been announced, but it is known to be not far distant. Mr. Dunbar is building a new house for their occupancy and as it is about completed it is thought the wedding will not be long delayed.

Mr. and Mrs. Clifton McCausland, of Graham street, have invitations out for a reception they will give tomorrow evening. The hour is 8:30 o'clock.

Mr. A. I. Scott is entertaining a party on board his yacht, "Coronado," which has recently been cruising on the Arkansas river, deer and duck hunting. The "Coronado" with Mr. Scott's party on board has been for the last few days at Lake Providence, La., but will go up the Red river to Shreveport at once and finally to New Orleans. In the party are Mr. and Mrs. A. I. Scott, Miss Mabel Scott and Miss Jennie Dumbrill, of Pittsburgh, and four of Mr. Scott's friends from Cincinnati.

One of the really delightful social affairs in New York last week was the studio tea given by William A. Coffin, the artist, formerly of this city. It was the occasion for remembering Mr. Coffin's birthday anniversary and also afforded the artist an opportunity of presenting his niece, Mrs. Charles C. Frye, a recent bride, to his friends in New York. The hours were from 4 to 7 and many distinguished men and women were present, among them Mr. and Mrs. Kenyon Cox, Mrs. Schuyler Van Rensselaer, Madame Griswold, Mr. and Mrs. Harold de Roaslof, Miss Vail, Mr. and Mrs. Eric Rossiter and many others. Mrs. Simmons poured the tea, and altogether it was a most charming and elegant affair. Mrs. Charles Frye is the daughter of Mrs. M. J. Coffin-Graif, of the East End, and has many friends in her old home. Mr. Coffin, it is pleasant to be able to announce, is to have an exhibition of his pictures here within a few days. Mr. Coffin, it will be recalled, has been prominently connected with the management of the two important portrait shows in New York, conducted by society women in aid of a big philanthropic merit, and which were such big successes. It will be also recalled that Mrs. Henry Kirke Porter was one of the patronesses of the first show and that in this show Miss Hegeman's portrait was prominently displayed. The Porters, by the way, accompanied, of course, by Miss Hegeman, are now comfortably established in their winter home at Jekyl Island, Ga., where they are members of the fashionable club that has made that beautiful island famed as a winter resort.

Miss Jackson and John B. Jackson have invitations out for a reception they will give next Thursday evening at Penntlam, Penn avenue, East End. The hours are from 8 to 12.

◇◆◇

Mr. and Mrs. Reed M. Vincent, of North Highland avenue, entertained the Tuesday Night Card club, of which they are members, on last Tuesday evening.

◇◆◇

Mrs. William Blackstock Rodgers, of the East End, gave a matinee party at the Alvin Theater on Tuesday for 30 people to see the Rodgers Brothers in their new play. Preceding the play luncheon was served at the Union cafe. The table decorations for the luncheon were of effective arrangement of white lilacs and ferns. The favors were big bunches of violets.

◇◆◇

Judge and Mrs. Thomas Mellon, of South Negley avenue, East End, have celebrated many birthday anniversaries together, but none which seemed so replete with good wishes and happiness as the joint celebration on Tuesday, which marked Judge Mellon's ninetieth birthday anniversary and Mrs. Mellon's eighty-sixth. This venerable and happy couple have been married upwards of 50 years, and at the family dinner on Tuesday four generations of the family were represented. Among the members of the family and guests present were Mr. and Mrs. James R. Mellon, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew W. Mellon, Mr. and Mrs. Richard B. Mellon, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas A. Mellon, Thomas Mellon, Mrs. Alexander King, Mrs. Samuel McKee, the Rev. Dr. Frank Snead, Dr. and Mrs. George M. Shillito, and a number of others. The floral decorations of the table were beautiful, white lilacs and pink roses being arranged to cover the entire center of the table. The favors were bunches of white lilacs, with hand-painted booklets for name cards. The fly-leaf of each booklet bore the inscription "T. M., S. J. M.," with quotations from the favorite poets of Judge and Mrs. Mellon. The house was decorated throughout with baskets of cut flowers, many of them sent by friends as pleasant reminders of the day.

One of the handsomest little entertainments of the late season was Irwin B. Laughlin's dinner on Wednesday night, for 10 people, at the Pittsburgh club. Two of the guests, Carroll Fitzhugh and Arthur Bell, are to leave shortly for a trip to Japan, and the dinner was really intended as a farewell in their honor. Mr. Laughlin's guests included, besides those mentioned, Mrs. Carroll Fitzhugh, Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Bell, Mr. and Mrs. John H. Ricketson, Jr., Miss Sara Ricketson, Miss Burd Thaw and Mr. Cadwallader. The dinner was followed by a bridge whist party with just enough guests present to fill two tables in the card room. Mr. Fitzhugh's parents, Gen. and Mrs. Charles Lane Fitzhugh, are already in Japan, having considerably extended a trip planned and begun several weeks ago.

Post-nuptial cards were issued on Thursday by Miss Mary Lighthill, announcing the marriage of her niece, Miss Sara Lindsay, to Hezekiah Nixon Duff, on Wednesday, February 4. The wedding took place at the bride's home in Bellefield and was a simply conducted but very pretty affair, with only relatives and the most intimate friends of the families present for the ceremony and a subsequent informal reception. The bride's uncle, the Rev. John R. Paxton, D. D., came on from New York to perform the marriage ceremony. The bride was given away by her guardian, Mr. Smith, and her attendants were Miss Maysie Hall of New Brunswick, N. J., who was maid of honor; Miss Effie Pogson of New York and Miss Nellie Harrison of Somerset. Mr. Duff's best man was Layden Ford of Toledo and the ushers were Harry M. Lindsay and Thomas McCoy. Mr. and Mrs. Duff left during the evening for their wedding trip, but do not expect to be away longer than a fortnight. When they return they will take up their residence in Bellefonte avenue.

◇◆◇

Mr. and Mrs. John K. Ewing, of North Highland avenue, East End, celebrated the 25th anniversary of their marriage on Monday evening last, by giving a large card party and dance, the dance rounding out an altogether delightful occasion. Mr. and Mrs. Ewing received together and were assisted in entertaining by Mrs George B. Motheral, Mrs. Frank Hudson, Mrs. Henry Kiehl, Mrs. Clifford Jenkins, Mrs. Frank Haskell, Mrs. Walter Gates, Mrs. W. D. Webb and a number of others. The house was very beautifully decorated for the occasion, the mantlepieces throughout being banked with early spring flowers, the library having an extra decoration of primroses, the dining room of daffodils, and the hall red roses, palms and foliage.

◇◆◇

Miss Emma Louise Myers gave a large card party on Monday afternoon at the Myers residence in North Negley avenue that combined all the elements of a really successful and enjoyable social function. The honor guests were Mrs. Reymann of Havre, France, who is visiting Miss Myers's sister, Mrs. Edward A. Nieman, of Stratford avenue; Mrs. Parker, one of the autumn brides; Miss Mary Thomas of Niles, O., and Miss Grace Young of Youngstown, house guests of Miss Myers. There were 13 card tables with about 80 guests in attendance, with the reception rooms beautifully decorated with American Beauty roses and spring flowers. In the evening Miss Meyers and her two house guests were entertained at dinner by Miss Emma Ray, the dinner being supplemented by a euchre party in the evening.

◇◆◇

Louis A. Duchez of East Palestine, O., has published a ballad, "The Song that Mother Sang."

◇◆◇

Mrs. Harmar D. Denny's card party on Friday afternoon was a most enjoyable and happy affair, with several little special features to add to its attractiveness. It was the fourth in a series of similar social events Mrs. Denny has been giving lately and seemed to be even more attractive than the others, if that could be possible. At eight tables the guests played bridge whist and at the remaining two domino whist, and the tables were placed throughout the drawing room and library. Among those who won prizes were Mrs. William Thaw, Jr., Mrs. George A. Macbeth, Mrs. A. J. Wurtz, Mrs. Louis Dalzell, Mrs. Lawrence Dilworth, Mrs. Joseph Wood, Miss Frances Reed and Miss Forsyth. Mrs. Denny will give another card party on February 16, invitations for which will be issued shortly.

The colonial reception which the Women's Industrial society of Calvary Methodist Episcopal church will give on February 17 will be one of the pretty and novel entertainments of the month. The reception will be conducted in the church parlors and will be an evening affair following the usual church supper served from 6 until 8. Among the guests of the evening, it is whispered, will be Mr. and Mrs. George Washington, who will hold a democratic levee as they did nearly 125 years ago.

Mrs. John A. Brashear gave a luncheon on Friday which was one of the most delightful entertainments of the week. Her guests were members of the summer colony in the Muskoka lake region centering at Beau Maris, Canada. There were two guests of honor—Mrs. William Fearman and Mrs. Chester Fearman, of Canada, who have been spending the past two weeks in Pittsburgh on their way east. Covers were laid for twenty-eight, and the luncheon was served in the large billiard room of the Brashear home, in Perrysville avenue, Allegheny. The table was beautifully decorated with flowers and happy reminiscences of Beau Maris days added to the enjoyment of the hostess and her guests. Those present included Mrs. John Walker, Mrs. Burgher, Mrs. Standish of Sewickley, Miss Logan, Mrs. McKay, Mrs. Fleming, Mrs. Mosack, Mrs. William Campbell, Mrs. Daniel Carhart, Mrs. J. A. McDowell, Miss Anderson, Mrs. Frank L. O. Wadsworth, Mrs. Alexander Dempster, Mrs. George T. Oliver, Mrs. Mary L. Cooper, Mrs. L. H. Willard, Mrs. James L. Buchanan, Mrs. Howard Blair, Mrs. Samuel M. Kintner, Mrs. S. H. Church, Mrs. Ohl, Mrs. Ruhe; Mrs. Charles Mellor, Mrs. Cassidy and Mrs. Davidson of Steubenville.

After the luncheon a screen was erected between the billiard room and the dining room, and Professor Brashear and Professor Samuel M. Kintner showed a series of superb lantern pictures of Muskoka lake scenery, following the series with a second of some of the finest scientific pictures recently received by Professor Brashear, some coming from California and South America.

The two visitors from Canada have been extensively entertained since their arrival in Pittsburgh by members of the Pittsburgh summer colony there. They were the guests of honor at Mrs. Willard's home in Western avenue on Thursday; on Friday Mrs. Brashear entertained, and on Wednesday of the preceding week Mrs. William Campbell was hostess in their honor, Mrs. Dempster entertaining for them on the following day. Small dinners and luncheons have filled the intervening days.

Washington Social Affairs

By MARGARET BRENT DOWNING.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7.—The most notable feature of the present season is the restoration of the evening reception to popularity. This form of entertainment has been almost obsolete during the past two decades. Mrs. Roosevelt has revived this stately custom and her leadership has been followed by the women of the diplomatic corps and the prominent senatorial hostesses. The mistress of the White House wisely decided that it is a more dignified form of hospitality. So far this season at least the kettledrum function, the stifling afternoon teas and the crowded days at home have given place to the salon.

Functions of the Week.

During the coming week Mrs. Roosevelt will entertain on Friday evening at a musical and reception. Other events scheduled for the week are the reception of the Peruvian legation on Wednesday. This will be followed by a dance. Gen. and Mrs. Draper will give a large reception and ball on Tuesday, and on Monday the Italian Ambassador and Madame des Planches will hold their weekly levee. There will be some notable dancing parties. On Wednesday will be the subscription dance of the debutantes and on Friday the Military ball, at the New Willard.

The most interesting events of the past week were the arrival of Madame Jusserand, wife of the French ambassador and the Baroness von Sternberg, wife of the German minister. Madame Jusserand has been introduced to the capital of her native land for the first time. She has at once been accorded a hearty welcome and commanding position. She has expressed herself as almost overpowered by the kindliness and courtesy.

Before Madame Jusserand was in Washington three days the ladies of every senatorial family in Washington had called upon her. This is an unprecedented honor, as the senatorial contingent are sticklers for the first call upon themselves. No woman in a foreign embassy, whether of American birth or not, has been accorded this spontaneous outburst of social sympathy and good will. Those who observe the little social straws for indications of greater movements are commenting upon this fact with unrestrained interest. Madame Jusserand succeeds as a Franco-American lady to the prestige so well founded and built by the genial and tactful Mr. and Madame Cambon; but the social movement indicates that the powers that be are deeply and cordially impressed with the fair conduct of France in the recent difficulties which have beset the national diplomacy.

Senatorial Ladies Unbend.

That American women feel a sisterly interest in the trials and difficulties of the women of their blood was also prettily exhibited in the case of the Baroness Speck von Sternberg. Many of the senatorial ladies waived the right of a first call in her case and promptly visited her within 48 hours of her arrival. A minister's wife is socially bound to make the first call upon a senatorial family, in their case the same contention is not urged which sometimes embroils the social intercourse between the wife and an ambassador and the senatorial contingent. Among those who called upon the Baroness von Sternberg were Mrs. Foraker, Mrs. Burrows, Mrs. Fairbanks, Miss Cockrell and Mrs. Hanna.

That there was something behind this more than mere social amenity is to be known from the fact that even recently this cordiality has been pointedly withheld by the ladies closely in touch with national affairs. In the case of the baroness von Sternberg much is to be attributed to the sympathy of American women with a sister who was placed in a very difficult and delicate position.

Madame Jusserand will be a decided acquisition to Washington society. She is a woman of fine presence and unusual intellectual endowments. Through her mother, who was Miss Kernochan, of New York city, she is connected with the most aristocratic families of the metropolis. The French embassy is in fairly good order and before Lent begins Madame Jusserand expects to hold a large reception. Immediately after the ambassador is received by the President he will tender the usual reception to the diplomatic corps. In the near future the President and Mrs. Roosevelt will give a small afternoon reception as a special compliment to the Jusserands and the Von Sternbergs. At present the ambassador and Madame Jusserand will be fully occupied in accepting the hospitality of American officials and the diplomatic corps.

Mme. Von Sternberg a Beauty.

Madame von Sternberg is not so fortunate in her surroundings at the German embassy. The house will have to be entirely renovated, and during this season the baron and baroness can not tender any formal hospitality. During the summer the embassy will be placed in the hands of architects and decorators and will be made a fit home for its charming young chatelaine. The baroness may be called the beauty of the present diplomatic corps. This honor was recently held by the daughter of Gen. Daniel Sickles, Mrs. Daryell E. M. Crackenthorpe, late of the British embassy. The baroness is accompanied by her sister, Miss Langham. The presence of a young lady gives additional interest to the German embassy, which has so long been a bachelor home. When the baron succeeds to the full rank of ambassador Miss Langham and the Countess Cassini will make a pretty couple of young belles in the ambassadorial set.

Miss Marion Cockrell's wedding to Edson F. Gallaudet, which will take place next Saturday will bring together the most brilliant assemblage at the Church of the Covenant seen since Helen Hay was married to Payne Whitney in the same edifice. The President and Mrs. Roosevelt, the cabinet, many of the supreme court and the diplomatic corps and nearly all the colleagues of the venerable Missouri senator will be present. Miss Cockrell will be attended by her sister, Miss Anna Ewing Cockrell, and the sister of the groom-elect, Miss Marion Gallaudet. The best man will be Frances Parsons of Hartford, Conn. The ushers will be Gifford Pinchot and Winthrop Dwight, of New York city; George Dudley Seymour, of New Haven, Conn.; John Robinson, of Hartford, Conn.; Frederick Allen, of St. Louis; Herbert Gallaudet, Ephram Brevard Cockrell and Allen Vardman Cockrell. Mr. Gallaudet is at present with the Cramps firm of Philadelphia, and will in all probability take his bride to that city. He is the son of Dr. Edward M. Gallaudet, president of the Colombia Institute for the Deaf and Dumb, and comes from a distinguished pioneer family of Hartford, Conn. On Thursday night Mr. and Mrs. Thomas F. Walsh will give a dinner followed by a musical in honor of Miss Cockrell and the wedding party.

Hanna's to Give a Dinner.

Among the dinners of the week will be one for Monday evening given by Senator and Mrs. Hanna. Other dinner hosts will be Representative Morrell, Senator and Mrs. Foraker. The Secretary of Agriculture and Miss Wilson will give the last of the cabinet dinners on Saturday evening in honor of the President and Mrs. Roosevelt.

Mrs. Charles W. Fairbanks will give a reception Wednesday afternoon. This is her first card entertainment of the season. While the entertainment is given to society generally, the guests will be selected mainly from the daughters of the American Revolution.

A notable visitor of the coming week will be Count Robert de Montesquieu Fezensac, the French poet and litterateur, who will be the guest of M. Jusserand. The count will lecture on art and literary subjects before different societies here, in Baltimore and other large cities. He is the owner of the famous de Montesquieu pavilion at Versailles, and has entertained many distinguished Americans at his home.

Miss Nellie Palmer, daughter of Representative and Mrs. Henry Palmer of Pennsylvania has returned from Paris and will spend the winter with her parents here. She has a fine voice which was trained at Paris and at the conservatory at Milan. Miss Palmer was recently the guest in Paris of Miss Thachra, daughter of the late Gen. Sherman.

The Parmington society, composed of the graduates of Miss Porter's school at Farmington, Conn., are planning a midlent entertainment for the benefit of the poor of Washington. The Hungarian band from Sherry's in New York city has been engaged and some noted artists will figure at the function. The promoters of the affair are Mrs. A. E. Bates, Mrs. Joseph P. Sanger, Mrs. Harriet Blaine Beale, Mrs. W. W. Rockhill, Miss Ruth Hanna and Miss Colburn.

CURIOUS HISTORY OF LONDON'S OLDEST BANK

Cromwell and Nell Gwynn Were Depositors in an Institution More Venerable Than "The Old Lady of Threadneedle Street."

By CYRIL BURTON.

(Special Correspondence Sunday Gazette.)

LONDON, Feb. 1.—Most people suppose the Bank of England to be the great-grandmother of London depositories, but there is another bank in the metropolis which is yet more venerable than the "Old Lady of Threadneedle Street," and even richer in quaint memories and interesting links with the past. This is "Child's Bank," which stands just at the beginning of Fleet street—where once Temple Bar bridged the way—and of which Lord Jersey is now the principal shareholder.

"Child's" was the first regular bank in London, dating from 1600, and Oliver Cromwell and Nell Gwynn were among its depositors. Aside from its age and historical associations, "Child's" Bank," which is among the richest of London financial strongholds, is most interesting because of the survival within its precincts at present of many of the old customs which were universal among the London business houses of 300 years ago. For greater security, the "junior partners" and "salaried partners" of every old London firm were in the habit of taking turns, week in and week out, of sleeping at their "shop," and to this day the directors of Child's keep up the old custom. Lord Jersey, who is one of the richest noblemen in the land, spends an occasional night at the bank, like all the rest. In the olden days, too, all clerks, who eventually did well, came to have a share in the business by which they were employed, this being a survival of the apprentice system, and even now young men who enter the service of Child's bank, if they behave themselves, can count on an interest in its operations in time.

No longer ago than the middle of Queen Victoria's reign many of the old customs regarding dress were still being adhered to religiously at Child's bank. Then one of the partners had his head powdered, while another had to wear a brown wig with a pigtail. All the partners and senior clerks wore knee breeches, slippers with buckles, blue coats with brass buttons and white neckcloths.

Once a Shop and Still a Shop.

Child's bank began as a goldsmith's shop. In bygone times all shops of that kind did what would now be called a banking business, and in the case of Child's the safeguarding of customers' money simply superseded the trade in the precious metal. Originally Child's was known as "At the Sign of the Marygold." The business in gold was done in the front part of the building, that of banking in the rear, and to this day the room in which the customers are received is known among the staff as "the shop." One of the most famous of the transactions of the bank as a goldsmith's office was the making of a silver "cisterne"—a sort of great bowl—for the Earl of Rutland. The "cisterne," which cost his lordship over $5,000, held 52 gallons. The silver bowl still is in the possession of the Rutland family, and its size can be judged by the accompanying picture, which shows the four children of the present earl enthroned within it.

They did a pawnbroking business at "The Sign of the Marygold," too. In the old ledgers of the shop can be found the record of the $25 loaned to the Countess of Devonshire on her coronet and of $100 advanced on "plate." The bank also loaned Lord Seafert $2,500 on his sword and plate.

In 1689 the rumor had gone abroad that there was to be a run on Child's. Depositors began gathering and the situation looked so desperate that the proprietor of the bank called upon his friend, Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough—the great duchess—to come to his aid. The lady at once collected all the cash of her own upon which she could lay hands and made her friends contribute all the funds they could spare. With these moneys she drove down to the bank. The money, which was in bags, was carried in, and the establishment was enabled to pay every one who demanded funds. Hogarth made a striking sketch of her grace's arrival at the bank, with the porters carrying in the bags of gold.

Between the Bank of England and Child's bank there used to be fierce rivalry. Once the larger institution determined to wipe the smaller out altogether. So it collected all the receipts for money deposited given by Child's that could be laid hands on, meaning to present them simultaneously in the hope that the private bank would not be able to meet them.

The plan "went agley," for Child's discovered what the Bank of England was doing, and, in great alarm, applied to a wealthy nobleman for cash assistance. The man of title, who had a sense of humor, "obliged" with a draft for $3,500,000—on the bank in Threadneedle street. After that Child's emulated Brer Rabbit and lay low. On the day when the trap was to be sprung a clerk from the Bank of England arrived at No. 1 Fleet street with a bag full of receipts on which he demanded payment. Simultaneously with his arrival, a messenger was dispatched to the Bank of England with the nobleman's draft, which he was instructed to cash. Meanwhile the representative of the "Old Lady" was told to present his receipts one at a time. The clerk at the desk took a record of them in a leisurely manner, and so managed to delay payment until the return of Child's messenger, when the representative of the Bank of England was paid in full with the notes on his own institution.

Cromwell and Nell Gwynn dealt with the bank in its earliest days. The favorite overdrew her account, and at her death was in Child's debt to the extent of over $5,000. There is no record that King Charles II. ever made the little sum good.

The Power of Niagara

An estimate of the water power used for generating electricity has been made by a German engineer. Germany and Austria thus utilize 180,000 horse power, Switzerland about 160,000, Sweden 200,000 and the United States 460,000. The total available power in Switzerland is placed at 2,000,000 horse power, that of France at 10,000,000, that of Germany, Austria, Switzerland and Italy together at 10,000,000, while in the United States Niagara alone could furnish 10,000,000.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful It Is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in the stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and, although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

Crown and Bridge Work

comes nearer to nature than any other operation in dentistry. Nature puts teeth in without plates. That is what our experts in crown and bridge work do. This work, to be of service, must be properly constructed, and requires the education of a dentist and the skill of a jeweler. Hence the importance of a specialist, whose work is cheapest because it looks the best and lasts the longest.

PENNSYLVANIANS IN THE SOUTH

PINEHURST, N. C., Feb. 6.—The southern resort season is at its height. Pinehurst, and there are thousands of people from northern cities seen at Tampa, Palm Beach, Thomasville, Ga., and the numerous resorts throughout Georgia, North Carolina and Florida, but can hardly pass promenades in any of these places without meeting familiar faces. Of all the resorts Pinehurst, in the pine forest of North Carolina, is in some respects the most unique. I fail to find any oldest inhabitant by which I can gauge the success of past seasons. Pinehurst has no oldest inhabitants. The institution itself is in its infancy, and as a whole altogether unique one. All the readers of The Gazette know how James W. Tufts went down to North Carolina,

Mr. and Mrs. John Robinson are the guests of relatives in Wooster, O.

Miss Jessie Wilson of Frederick avenue returned on Tuesday from Atlantic City, where she spent the month of January.

Charles Ramsey of New York spent part of the week with Mrs. Ramsey, the guest of his sister, Mrs. William Arrott of Glen Osborne.

This coming week in the social set in the valley will be devoted to teas and receptions. On Monday Miss Isabel Baldwin of Quaker Valley will entertain at a 5 o'clock tea in honor of Mrs. Frank Bope of Zanesville, O., who is the guest of Mrs. John E. Porter, a sister of the hostess. Mrs. Lawrence Crane Woods of Edgeworth has issued invitations for Tuesday afternoon for a large reception at the Edgeworth club, from 3 until 5 o'clock.

Mrs. Lewis Butler Whitney of Grant street will entertain at a tea on Wednesday afternoon from 3 until 5 o'clock, in honor of her house guest, Mrs. Yardley of Philadelphia.

Mrs. John Reed Bowen of Beaver street has issued cards for a tea on Thursday afternoon and Miss Isabel Baldwin of Quaker Valley will give a large reception and dance at the Allegheny Country club on Sewickley Heights on Friday evening.

Mrs. Albert Drew Shannon and daughter, Miss Margaret Shannon, have issued invitations for two large luncheons for Thursday and Friday of this week at their home in Edgeworth.

Miss Millie Slagle of Quaker Valley entertained on Tuesday afternoon at cards in honor of Mrs. Conroy Macon and Miss Armistead Talliaferro of Orange Courthouse, Va. Mrs. Macon, nee Miss Alexander, and about 40 guests were present and a delightful afternoon was spent at six-hand euchre. The pretty prizes were won by Mrs. Macon, one of the honor guests, Mrs. Lewis B. Whitney and Miss Jane Knox.

Mr. William McVay of Bank street entertained on Tuesday evening at a theater party at the Alvin in honor of Mrs. J. Nevin Schrodt of Lawrence, Pa., the guest of the bride-elect of his cousin, Mrs. Charles B. McVay of Centennial avenue. Among the other guests were Mrs. Charles B. McVay, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. George Rice and Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Christy.

Mr. and Mrs. James Brown of Beaver street also entertained a party of their friends at the Alvin on Tuesday evening, followed by a supper at the club. Mr. and Mrs. Richard R. Quay, Mr. and Mrs. David Stewart, Miss Patty Neal and Mr. Neal were among the guests.

Miss Anna Dole of the School of Domestic Science of Sewickley entertained at a chafing dish supper at the school rooms on Wednesday in honor of Prof. Charles Zueblin, B. D., of the University of Chicago, who addressed the Woman's club of Sewickley valley on that afternoon. Among the guests invited to meet Prof Zueblin were Mr. and Mrs. George H. Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. T. H. B. McKnight, Miss Bakewell, Miss Mary Osburne and Mr. Frank Osburne. A delightfully informal feature of the occasion was that the hostess had several chafing dishes going at once, the guests cooking the dainties at the table. Pink fern roses were used for decorations.

Mrs. Theodore W. Nevin of Broad street entertained the members of the "French Class" at a pretty luncheon on Wednesday. The artistic decorations of gay yellow tulips and the dainty appointments were most tastefully arranged. Among the guests present were Mrs. Robert Wardrop, Mrs. J. Wallis Tener, Mrs. Archibald George, Mrs. Charles McKnight and Mrs. Henry A.

The largest and handsomest social event of the week in the valley was the reception given at the Edgeworth club on Friday afternoon by Mrs. Joseph N. Dickson of Edgeworth and Miss Jean Hendrie of Sewickley in honor of two recent brides, Mrs. Robert Watson Dickson of Edgeworth and Mrs. Louis Downer Tracey of Bellevernon, Pa., a daughter-in-law and niece of Mrs. Dickson and cousin of Miss Hendrie. The party received together in the large red and white parlor of the club, which was tastefully decorated with ferns, palms and other tropical plants. Mrs. Dickson was handsomely gowned in black lace over white silk. Miss Hendrie wore a becoming gown of cream silk with touches of green. The brides in their wedding gowns of white silk and chiffon elaborately trimmed in point and duchess lace formed a handsome group. In an alcove in the broad hall was a full orchestra, which added greatly to the pleasure of the guests. The artistic green and white drawing room was effectively decorated with quantities of red roses and smilax fern. Assisting the hostesses were Mrs. Charles Watts, Miss Agnes Graff, Mrs. Henry Graff, Mrs. Hepburn Johns, Mrs. Eugene Murray, Miss Elizabeth Dickson, Mrs. Frank Straw, Mrs. John B. Reno, Mrs. John T. Findley, Mrs. Joseph T. Nevin, Mrs. Harry Campbell, Miss Mary Baird, Miss Cora Thomson, Miss Jennie Wallace, Mrs. Percy Bishop, Mrs. Frederick Way, Miss Bessie Cunningham, Miss Margaret Smith, Miss Bertha Taylor, Miss Eliza Atwell and Miss Clyde Nichols. A number of the guests were from the city, as well as Sewickley and the surrounding towns on the Fort Wayne railroad.

Capt. and Mrs. Charles W. Brown of Academy avenue entertained some out-of-town guests at a handsome dinner last Monday evening. Covers were laid for ten.

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Murray, who have spent the last year with Mrs. Murray's mother, Mrs. Agnes Graff, of Leetsdale, have leased a pretty home in Thorn street, Sewickley, of which they will take possession the first of April.

Mrs. Edward Jefferson of Thorn street entertained at a small but pretty luncheon on Monday in honor of her house guest, Mrs. Frank M. Dorman of South Charleston, O.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Wilson Norris of the family of Academy avenue are located at the Raymond, Pasadena, Cal.

Mrs. Stuibey and daughter, Miss Rachel Stuibey, who have been the guests of Miss Cora Thomson of Bank street for several days, left during the week for their home in Cleveland, Ohio.

Washington

WASHINGTON, PA., Feb. 7.—A very brilliant social event of the past week was the reception given by Miss McKennan, Miss Rebecca McKennan and Miss Henrietta McKennan at their home in East Maiden street on Thursday afternoon, from 3 to 6 o'clock. The McKennan residence was handsomely decorated with pink roses, potted plants and tall palms. The Misses McKennan were assisted in receiving by their mother, Mrs. M. S. McKennan. Mrs. James Cummins of Wheeling and Mrs. Moore McKennan of Pittsburgh, other assistants were Mrs. Andrew M. Linn, Mrs. Charles Caldwell, Mrs. Joseph Baird, Mrs. Harry Duncan, Miss Anica Baird, Miss Mary McKennan, Miss Grace Acheson, Miss Janet Eleanor Miller, Miss Kate McAdam, Miss Katherine Brownlee Reed, all of this place; Mrs. H. H. Miller of Claysville, Miss Roger Reed of Pittsburgh, Miss Anica Cummins and Miss Margaret Cummins of Wheeling. Among the out-of-town guests were: Mrs. T. M. McKennan, Mrs. Moore McKennan, Mrs. J. H. Moore, Mrs. John E. Woods, Mrs. F. J. Lemoyne, Mrs. Moses Atwood, Mrs. B. F. McVay, Miss Gutman, Miss Reed, Miss Marquis, Miss Alexander and Miss Mary G. Acheson, all of Pittsburgh; Mrs. Hall, of Virginia; Mrs. Parnassus; Mrs. H. H. Miller, Miss Abercrombie, Miss Noble, Miss Anderson, all of Claysville; Miss Baird, Mrs. J. E. B. Sweeney, Mrs. Thomas Sweeney, Mrs. W. H. Hearne, Mrs. James Dickey and Mrs. James Rich, all of Wheeling; Mrs. Thomas Forge of Rochester and Mrs. G. G. Oliver of Clarksburg.

Another charming reception last week was that given by Mrs. William E. Denney and her daughter, Miss Mary Bell Denney, at their home on East Maiden street, Tuesday afternoon. The house was handsomely decorated with pink roses and carnations, with a pleasing interspersion of smilax and other greenery. Mrs. Denney and her daughter were assisted in receiving by Mrs. McLachlan, Mrs. David M. Campsey of Claysville, Miss Ross of Pittsburgh; Mrs. M. S. Smalley, Mrs. W. Franklin Penn of Washington; and Miss Jessie Edna Rinehart of Waynesburg. In the dining room Mrs. W. E. Simmons and Mrs. Sara Renshaw were assisted by Miss Clara Kelley, Miss Laura Dunn, Miss Alice Jane Taylor, Miss Anna Dougan and Miss Virginia Bradley Tiffin. Among the out-of-town guests were: Mrs. H. H. Miller of Claysville; Mrs. Robert Downey, Mrs. Olom, Mrs. William Hill, Miss Lucy Ross, Miss Clara Lindsay, Miss Jessy Hogue and Miss Jane Mealy of Waynesburg; and Miss Ross of Pittsburgh.

College fraternity affairs are always pleasing and the dance and reception given last evening at Morgan's hall by the Pennsylvania Alpha chapter at Washington and Jefferson college of the Phi Kappa Psi fraternity eclipsed anything given here this winter. The decorations were gorgeous, and elaborate in the extreme. The german was led by Miss Amelia Wrenshall and Mr. Maurice Ritchie, a member of the local chapter. The patronesses for the affair were some of Washington's most prominent women and were: Mrs. H. E. Acheson, Mrs. E. E. Cruneline, Mrs. John Donath, Mrs. Colin Reed, Mrs. Benjamin Muray, Mrs. Robert K. Duncan, Mrs. John M. Dunn, Mrs. Charles Caldwell, Mrs. C. N. Brady and Mrs. Alexander Paxton. Among the girls and men of the college, smart set present were: Miss Harriette Reed, Miss Katharine Brownber Reed, Miss Lulu Robinson, Miss Arielle Irtan McMillan, Miss Elizabeth McMillan, Miss Caldwell, Miss McKeever, Isa Florence, Mae Milne, ss Mary Griffiths, Miss Elizabeth Griffiths, Miss Charlotte Blaine Adams, Miss Bailey, Miss Rose Aiken, Miss Ella Aiken, Miss MaWhinney, Miss Dunney, Miss Anna Dougan, Miss Wrenshall, Miss Ethel Hart, Miss Anna Miller, Miss Allison, Miss Grace Snowden, Miss Elibabeth McClerey, Miss Meyers, Mr. W. W. McAdams, Mr. Sherrard Irving, Mr. Joseph Dury, Mr. Horace Dury, Mr. John Thompson, Mr. Maurice Ritchie, Mr. Robert Nelson, Mr. Ash, Mr. Allen Dunn, Mr. Warner Brittian, Mr. Clifford Brittian, Mr. Paris V. Braden, Mr. Jacob B. Otto, Mr. Alexander Acheson, Lt. Samuel D. Foster, Mr. Haveg, Mr. Ralph Hellman, Mr. O. P. Brown, Mr. W. A. Dearth, Mr. J. R. Dickey, Mr. Charles G. Eccles, Mr. Al. Gill, Mr. Brittan of Pittsburgh.

Mr. L. S. Vorrell and Mrs. Vorrell leave on Monday for an extended European trip.

The engagement of Maj. Enos L. Christman of this place and Mrs. Catherine E. Stofer of Middletown has been announced, to terminate in an early summer wedding.

One of the delightful events which enlivened the social routine of the week was the masquerade and german given by the cadets of the Trinity Hall military school last Thursday evening. The whole building was ablaze with light and color, and the dancing hall was gorgeously decorated.

Irwin

IRWIN, PA., Feb. 7.—The social event of the mid-winter season in Irwin was the at home given Monday evening by Mr. and Mrs. B. M. McWilliams of Walnut street. It was the occasion of the fifteenth anniversary of marriage, or their crystal wedding. About 100 guests from Irwin and out of town points were present. The house was suberbly decorated with plants and flowers and with shaded electric light effects. The music was furnished by Vance's orchestra of Greensburg and Kuhn of Pittsburgh provided an elaborate menu for lunch. Mr. and Mrs. McWilliams received many handsome gifts of cut glass, notably a large candelabra from Irwin friends and a water pitcher and goblets from the choir of the Methodist Episcopal church, of which Mr. McWilliams is director. Guests present from abroad were: Miss Bessie Fast, Mr. R. D. Elwood, Jr., and Mr. T. J. Elwood of Pittsburgh, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. McGilvrey and the Misses Emma and Mildred Keffer of Edgewood. Mr. and Mrs. E. McWilliams and the Misses Laura and Gertrude McWilliams of Wilkinsburg, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Leever and the Misses Lillian and Minnie Wallace of McKeesport, Mr. and Mrs. A. A. McKeesport

MCKEESPORT, Feb. 7.—The Ladies' Aid Society of the Coursin Street Methodist Episcopal Church celebrated its anniversary Tuesday evening with a reception to members and friends. The affair took place at the spacious home of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Zenn, on Union avenue, and was enjoyed by about 150 people. A musical program was rendered, giving much pleasure to the auditors. Mr. Phillip Zenn, the host, gave an address of welcome, which was responded to in a happy fashion by Col. C. C. Fawcett, who included in his remarks some interesting information as to the work done during the past year by the organization. The ladies, headed by the hostess, served a prettily appointed banquet to the guests, this being one of the delightful features of the occasion.

Among the social events of the winter was one last Sunday which created a little excitement. It was the elopement of Mr. Samuel W. Heath, Jr., of Portland, and Miss Elizabeth Dent, of Uniontown. They went to Cumberland, where they were united in marriage by Rev. W. A. Melvin, pastor of the Methodist Protestant Church. The reverend gentleman made the journey to Elmer Serena to perform the ceremony, which he did with his usual grace. The young couple returned to McKeesport on Monday. They were showered with congratulations after they had explained the condition of affairs. Mr. Heath is the son of Samuel W. Heath, Sr., one of the pioneer settlers of this vicinity, and is a popular young man. He holds a good position with the National Tube Co. The bride is the beautiful favorite of Uniontown, and the daughter of a prosperous farmer. At present the newly married couple are stopping at the home of the groom's parents, but they will soon go to housekeeping in this city.

The engagement of Miss Alice Austin, of No. 2125 Bowman avenue, and Mr. William Schmidt, of Bellevernon, has been announced. The date for the wedding has not been set, but it will take place some time this month. The prospective groom is employed at the tinplate mill at Dommler and at present is making his home in this city, where the young couple will go to housekeeping after their marriage.

The Women's Auxiliary of the McKeesport Turn and Gesang Veirein celebrated its nineteenth anniversary on Monday evening with a reception which proved a merry social affair.

Miss Pearl Marks celebrated her eighteenth birthday Monday evening by entertaining a party of young folks who passed a pleasant evening with parlor games and music.

Miss Nellie Nelson was given a surprise Tuesday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Hershey, where she is a guest. A musical and literary program was given and various games enjoyed.

Miss Esther Jones, at her home on West Park way, entertained the Nike club this evening. She was assisted by Miss Nan Evans. Euchre was the diversion and refreshments were served. The Nike club has special regulations in the matter of entertaining. The members take turns at being hostess, but none but prize winners are invited guests. There is for the head prize, and $1 for the second prize. Sometimes, however, the girls buy materials costing the sums named and make, by hand, very beautiful tokens which are worth considerably more than the prizes. Should the matter of refreshments the hostess is limited to three essentials, but the list of entrees is so comprehensive that a very substantial repast is provided.

On Monday evening Miss Odessa Moore, at her home on Walnut street, will entertain the W. A. S. Reading club.

Mrs. E. Mellinger and her mother, Mrs. Mary A. Black, at their home, No. 370 Soles street, were tendered a surprise party Thursday evening by a party of friends. A musical program had been arranged. Prof. McKinney entertained with violin music, accompanied by Miss Edna Mellinger on the piano. A phonograph recital was given by Mrs. Collier.

Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Forney, of Riverview Farm, entertained a party of young folks in honor of their son, Byron Forney. A guessing contest was the amusement feature. Mr. Clyde Cunningham won the head prize, a book. The test was to name the author of quotations given.

Miss Mary J. Dowlin, of this city, and Mr. John Collins, of Uniontown, were married at 4 o'clock Monday afternoon at the home of Rev. John Moore, in Uniontown. There were no attendants, the ceremony being quite simple. The young couple will reside in this city.

On Friday afternoon the McKeesport Woman club spent a few hours discussing Bancroft, the historian. Mrs. Elmer Serena was the leader. A very interesting paper on "History of the United States" was read by Mrs. Dr. J. T. Blackburn, a number of quotations being given by the other members. Richard Hildreth and John G. Palfrey, contemporary writers, were discussed. Mrs. A. N. Lawson had charge of "Current Topics." and made that department especially interesting by bringing up a number of the important questions of the present time.

Homestead

HOMESTEAD, Pa., Feb. 7.—St. David's Day will be celebrated by the Welsh residents of Homestead on an elaborate scale and everything possible to make the event a notable one is being done by the committee in charge. It is proposed holding an entertainment, dance and banquet on February 28 in the Fifth Avenue Opera House, to which a number of prominent Welshmen have been invited to make addresses.

A very successful club dance was given Thursday evening by the members of the Carnegie club at the club rooms. The dances were a feature of the club life last season and promise to be even more interesting this season.

A new social club of well-known young men was formed during the past week and their initial dance will be held February 24 in the Realty hall. The new club will be known as the Floridora club and a suit of rooms has been secured in the Realty building. Frank Duffy is the president and Harry Kries is secretary.

The next meeting of the Fortnightly Euchre club will be Friday evening next, when the club will meet in Steenson's hall and dancing will be indulged in after the card games.

Miss Annie May Thomas, of West Homestead, and Gilbert H. Tompkins, of Wilkinsburg, were married Wednesday at the home of the bride's parents in Neel street, Homestead. After a wedding trip in the east they will go to housekeeping in West Homestead.

Mrs. Homer Williams will entertain at euchre at her home in Munhall Thursday evening. It is expected to be the largest card party held in this vicinity in years and invitations have been issued in all the nearby towns.

John C. James and Miss Elizabeth Jenkins were married Saturday evening at the parsonage of the Baptist church by the Rev. W. Quay Rosselle. Both are well-known young people and they will go to housekeeping on Hays street.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Parsons, of Munhall, celebrated their tenth wedding anniversary Saturday evening and a large gathering of their friends assisted in making the affair a very pleasant one.

Members of the Ancient Order of Hibernians from Homestead and all the nearby towns were present in large numbers at the annual reception held Wednesday evening in the Fifth Avenue Opera House by the local branch of Hibernians. The affair was the most successful ever held by them.

Nearly 500 invitations have been issued for the reception to be given by the Homestead high school alumnia in Steenson's hall, February 19. Arrangements for the affair are being made on an elaborate scale.

The Entre Nous club dance in Steenson's hall Thursday evening was well attended.

The members of the Protected Home Circle are arranging for a dance to be given in Realty hall on the evening of April 16.

Braddock

BRADDOCK, Pa., Feb. 7.—Mr. and Mrs. Louis Drexler celebrated their fifth wedding anniversary at their home, in West Braddock avenue, Monday evening. Nearly 100 guests were at the home during the hours of the reception and many unique and interesting mementoes in wood were received by Mr. and Mrs. Drexler. The house was decorated throughout in cut flowers and potted plants. Dancing and various parlor amusements formed the principal amusement.

Mrs. Wilson Packer entertained Wednesday afternoon at her home in North Braddock in honor of her sister, Miss Klingensmith. Euchre was one of the amusements and the prizes were won by Miss Flora Packer, Mrs. Louis Drexler and Miss Fegan.

The dance of the Braddock club Friday night at Assembly hall, Wilkinsburg, was well attended.

The Evening Euchre club will be entertained on Tuesday evening by Miss Gail Hunter of Turtle Creek and Miss Ida Sandels at the latter's home in Library street.

Edward Rishel of this place and Miss Cora L. Brewer of Hazelwood were married Tuesday evening by the Rev. C. A. Miller at the parsonage of the Second U. B. church.

The third euchre in the series given by the members of St. Thomas' congregation was held Tuesday evening and proved an enjoyable affair. The prizes were won by Thomas Griffith, Thomas Quinn, John Kearns, Mrs. Thomas Lawler, Miss Jennie Price and Miss Mary Brennan.

The first dance of the Toreador club, composed of a number of well-known young men, was held Wednesday evening and was attended by a large number of guests from Braddock and vicinity.

A supper party was given at the home of Prof. E. F. Loucks of Moody street Monday evening in honor of his birthday. The company was composed of friends from Wilkinsburg and Etna, most of whom were students of Barkeyville academy during Mr. Loucks's principalship there.

The annual banquet of the North Braddock firemen was given in the engine house Monday evening and was attended by 150 members of the three fire companies. Speeches and vocal selections made an entertainment that was highly enjoyed by all present.

Duquesne

DUQUESNE, Pa., Feb. 7.—James H. Cowan and Miss Helen Jenkins were married Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock at the home of the bride's parents in South Sixth street by the Rev. Dr. D. J. Davis, pastor of the First M. E. church. The ceremony was witnessed only by the immediate friends of the contracting parties. Mr. Cowan and his bride are both prominent young people. They have gone to housekeeping in Mifflin township.

Cards were issued this week by the Assembly club, the new social organization composed of prominent young men, for a dance to be given in Bank hall on the evening of Wednesday, February 11. The dance is the first to be given by the club and it promises to be one of the most enjoyable of the season. Three hundred invitations have been issued to young people in Duquesne and nearby towns.

A delightful surprise party was held Saturday evening last at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William F. Dell in South Duquesne avenue in honor of their daughter, Miss Wilda. Music and parlor games furnished the principal amusements of the evening and a dainty lunch was served.

A novel entertainment in the form of a pop corn party will be given by the members of the ladies' aid society of the Emory M. E. church at the home of Miss Sadie Marks Thursday evening next. The affair promises to be largely attended.

Miss Mary Duffy was the hostess at a euchre party, which was given at the home of Miss Zella Bovard of South Duquesne avenue Thursday evening. Ten tables were used for the games and dainty prizes were awarded the winners.

Miss Fannie Black of Kennedy avenue gave a delightful euchre party at her home Saturday evening in honor of her cousin, Charles E. Kennedy, of Chicago, who has been a guest at her home for several days. The games proved very interesting and William Baily won the first prize.

Friday evening the members of the Christian Endeavor society of the Presbyterian church were treated to a delightful entertainment in the church. The entertainment was arranged by the entertainment committee of the society and proved highly enjoyable to all present.

Misses Amelia Kessler and Margaret Zewe were entertained on Sunday by Coal Valley friends.

Miss Katherine Dryer has returned after a visit to relatives at Fayette.

Wilmerding

WILMERDING, Feb. 7.—The progressive euchre under the auspices of the Ladies' Catholic Beneficial association in St. Aloysius hall, February 18, promises to be one of the events of the season in Wilmerding, and it will be one of the last entertainments before Lent. Elaborate preparations have been made for the affair, and eight handsome prizes will be awarded the winners of the games.

The ladies of St. Margaret's Episcopal mission will have a social and entertainment for the members of the congregation and their friends at the home of T. E. Roberts in Grant street, Turtle Creek, Thursday evening, February 19.

The Chrysanthemum Euchre club held its first meeting at the residence of Charles Hinkle, on Santos street, East McKeesport, Friday evening.

Thomas Taylor and family of East McKeesport will leave next week for Florida to spend the winter months.

The fifth annual reception of the Wilmerding Young Men's Institute will be given in Cunningham's hall, Monday evening, February 23.

Miss Mable Foust of Connellsville is the guest of her sister, Mrs. Prof. W. G. Gans.

Miss Kiska Davis of Steubenville, O., is the guest of her sister, Mrs. Albert Wright of Westinghouse avenue.

Mrs. Charles Sallers of New Orleans is visiting her sister, Mrs. Samuel Williams of Air Brake avenue.

A smoker for the members of the Westinghouse Air Brake band will be given in the band room on Wednesday evening next.

Capt. Richard P. Hobson, the hero of the Merrimac, delivered his lecture on "America, Mistress of the Seas," under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. tonight to a large audience. Sunday he will be entertained at the home of E. A. Givin, of Welsh avenue. Harry Alvin Hall, ex-United States attorney for the western district of Pennsylvania, and Eugene E. Baird, district attorney of Elk county, will also be guests.

Turtle Creek

TURTLE CREEK, Feb. 7.—A plate shower given at the home of Miss Martha Boyd Thursday afternoon in honor of Miss Margaret Thompson of Allegheny proved to be one of the most delightful affairs held here for some time and was largely attended by Miss Boyd's many girl friends. Mrs. Hamilton Swindel of Allegheny assisted Miss Boyd in entertaining during the afternoon.

The Turtle Creek Improvement club held their regular meeting Thursday in the parlors of the Presbyterian church. An informal program was conducted. Mrs. J. K. Miller's paper on "Oliver Wendell Holmes" was read by Mrs. W. T. McConnell in the absence of Mrs. Miller, and the "Autocrat of the Breakfast Table" was the subject of a bright discussion, opened by Mrs. S. A. Rath. One new member, Mrs. William Power, was elected. The club decided to meet hereafter at the homes of the members.

The local lodge of Good Templars celebrated their first anniversary by an open installation and entertainment Wednesday evening. A large number of the members and their friends were present.

The ladies of the First Methodist church gave a very successful waffle supper in the church, Friday and Saturday evenings. The ladies of the Presbyterian church are arranging for a chicken supper to be given in the church parlors Friday evening next.

Dr. E. T. Hagerman delivered a lecture in the United Presbyterian church Wednesday evening that was largely attended.

Miss Gail Hunter will leave Monday for Johnstown to visit friends.

Gen. Miles Starts Home.

LONDON, Feb. 7.—Lieut. Gen. Miles and party left here today to join the Cunard steamer Lucania at Liverpool.

Romance of a Woman's Life in Frozen Alaska

Written for The Sunday Gazette by NORA YEATS HAVEN.

ON a clear and bracing winter morning a trim little woman, dressed in furs from crown to heel, came out of her log house in Council City, Alaska. There was a sled at the door, to which were harnessed six shaggy Eskimo dogs chafing and impatient for the start. The driver, also dressed in heavy furs, smoothed out the robes for the little woman and bundled her up so that nothing was visible save her eyes and strapped her securely to the sled. He then took the driving seat, pulled the deerskins over himself snugly and at the crack of his long whip the team started at a lively gait.

This was the beginning of the journey of Miss Frances E. Fitz, deputy United States recorder of Council City, mine owner, newspaper proprietor, as well as stenographer and typewriter and notary public of the furthest north mining camp on the Pacific coast, who was bound on a visit to her friends in the east, whom she had not seen for three years.

"Nome, you know, is a hundred miles from Council, and is a three days' trip," said Miss Fitz in recounting her experiences. "When we got fairly started we were overtaken by one of those terrible storms which are so common in Alaska, hurling sharp particles of snow and sleet in our faces and coming down so thick that we could not see the dogs ahead. The cold was intense, many degrees below zero.

Blown Into the Sea.

"Trail there was none, but only a trackless waste of snow and ice. The sled rocked from side to side, and in spite of the utmost efforts of the driver was slowly forced seaward by the winds. Here we overtook a man who was making his way to the nearest shelter. With his assistance the driver managed to keep the trail until a strong wind blew dogs, sled, driver, man and all, rolling them over and over into the sea.

"I thought it was goodby that time, but the driver and the dogs managed to scramble onto the ice again and pull the sled ashore, the weight of the man on the back tipping the front up enough to let it slide upon the ice. We started at a furious rate for the nearest road house, the stranger sitting on my head.

"'Say, there's a woman in there!' shouted the driver. 'All right!' hollered the man, still keeping his seat, the wind howling such a gale that he could not catch the driver's words. Time and again the sled turned over and was righted. We stopped at a road house, which was nothing more than a hole in the ground ten feet square and a roof over it.

"'All full!' shouted the proprietor. 'Not room for another one!' We made all haste to the next place, some miles further on. Our wet clothes were frozen like boards.

"'Here's the house,' said the driver.

"'Where?' I asked.

"'There,' he replied, pointing to a hole in the snow.

"Going down a flight of 15 or 20 steps cut from the frozen snow and forming a tunnel, we entered a room about 15 feet square. Like the last road house, this was simply a hole in the ground. Here were 12 men and 18 dogs, and the door was covered with the wet, reeking straw from the sleds, sending up a nasty steam as it dried before the fire. Mixed with the steam were the fumes of tobacco and the strong smell of the wet dogs. The heat of the place was almost unbearable, being about 120 degrees.

A Homely Shelter.

"After making some chocolate for myself at the cast iron stove—for every one prepares his own food at such places—and cooking the fish and rice for the dogs, I was assigned to one of the four bunks, a man being kind enough to give his up for me. Sleep was out of the question amid the snoring of the men, the striking of matches and the low growling of the dogs. The lamp had been turned down, and in the dim light one could see the mass of human arms and legs mixed in with the 18 dogs, all lying on the straw before the fire."

As Miss Fitz lay looking at this weird spectacle, the dogs, for some unknown reason, began a fierce fight, worrying, biting and tearing one another's throats and emitting the most horrible noises and barking and howling with pain. Above all could be heard the rough voices of the men swearing and shouting at the top of their lungs. To the frightened young woman it seemed as though this lasted for an age, and even after the melee was over the growling of the dogs lasted for the rest of the night.

"There was another way," explained Miss Fitz, "of getting to Nome—that was by the 'hot air wagon.' This was a sort of stage, fitted with a cover and a stove inside. One great drawback was that the driver could not be induced to start before 12 o'clock at night. He would sit up and smoke and talk. This meant that his passengers, too, had to sit up till midnight, instead of getting their good night's rest before their long journey, which would keep them up at least two more nights. But the 'hot air wagon' was not calculated for such a rough country, and it frequently toppled over, until it finally caught fire from the stove upsetting, and that was the end of it."

After many other experiences of the same perilous description she reached Nome and took steamer to Seattle. At Omaha she discarded her furs for the dress of civilization and so proceeded to New York.

A Woman's Pluck.

The story of Miss Fitz's life in Alaska reads like a romance. She had taken along her inseparable companion, the typewriter, and a few days after her arrival she was installed as clerk in the office of the town recorder. Here she soon became an invaluable functionary, her work consisting of drawing up and recording mining claims, contracts, bills of sale and a mass of business correspondence. Her income was many times that of a stenographer in the east, and she soon began to look around for investment for her savings.

She built herself a very substantial log cabin, making it strong and warm to keep out the winter blasts. Finding that it would be necessary to have a cellar for her winter stores, she tried to hire men to dig it, but none were to be had.

"So I did the work myself," she said, "and the only tools I had to excavate with were a tin spoon, a trowel and a dust pan."

Unless one is well provided with winter supplies, it will go hard with him. "Last winter," she explained, "I paid $30 for 100 pounds of onions, $25 for 100 pounds of potatoes, and $15 for 10 gallons of Standard oil. Meats average from 65 to 75 cents a pound."

Miss Fitz's cabin at Council City is an odd-looking snuggery. Rude, but comfortable seats, home-made cushions and divans, and a great stove in the center, make it an ideal winter home for the Arctic. There are few social advantages in Council, and when the population is under the snow for months, with the winter gales blowing so strongly outside that walking on the slippery surface of the snow is well nigh impossible, and with the thermometer anywhere from 30 to 60 below zero, formal social functions are few and far between.

Society in Land of Snow.

But the presence of a bright woman in a mining camp works a transformation, and when Miss Fitz gives an occasional little dinner in her cabin there is no lack of guests. Before coming away, she gave a full five course dinner, consisting of oysters, soup, salad, fish, entrees, roasts, vegetables, desert, fruit and coffee. Mrs. Phillips, the only other social light in the community, and who owns a roomy cabin, also gives occasional dinners. These and similar events are red letter days in the long winters in that snowbound country.

During the long winters, which last from the middle of September to the middle of June, it is not uncommon for a whole town to be buried under 12 to 14 feet of snow.

"I have seen drifts," said Miss Fitz, "75 and 80 feet deep. Entrance to the houses is gained by tunnels dug through the snow. As the snow on the roofs increases in depth extra lengths of stove pipe are added to the chimney. The winters are hard, they are terribly hard, and any one who has not been out there cannot realize how cold it is.

"If a death occurs at this season of the year it is, of course, impossible to bury the body, so it is laid away in the snow, where it remains until the thaw comes, when it is properly interred. On fine winter days the men of the community hunt the seal, shoot and trap the ptarmigan—a native bird, the flesh of which is very palatable—or fish through the ice. Cutting wood for fuel is also a prime winter industry, and every cabin has its wood heaped up in large quantities. Occasionally a party would make an excursion on sleds on the ice, far out to where the winter bergs formed, miles off shore. On more than one occasion steamers have landed passengers on these extended icebergs, being unable to come within several miles of the land itself.

Speaking of one of her experiences Miss Fitz said: "A party of us started out over the ice for an all day trip and I took particular pains to prepare a very nice lunch. When we had gone about 12 miles some of us began to get hungry, and you may imagine our feelings when we found that the lunch had been left behind. Some were in favor of going right back for it. We had left at 6 that morning and would not reach our destination until 10 o'clock that night—a long time to be without food.

"The prospects for getting something to eat didn't look very bright. I had two one-pound boxes of chocolate candies, which a friend had sent me from the 'outside.' We all sat down and the candies were dealt out two apiece and two for each of the dogs. Chocolate, you know, is very sustaining," she explained.

APRIL 1ST IS NEAR AT HAND!
WHERE ARE YOU GOING TO LIVE NEXT YEAR?

Rents are on the increase. This condition of things can't be helped. If 25,000 more houses could be built in Pittsburgh today they would be rented tomorrow, and the rent rates not lowered thereby.

The only way to escape from high rents is to own your own home. We'll sell you a house in BELMAR PLACE on terms which will surprise you. An easy payment down and a smaller payment each month than you would pay in rent for a house not even half as good.

These houses are very attractive brick residences of eight and nine rooms, with all the modern improvements.

Choice corner lots from $3,500 to $5,500, a few a little higher. Our representatives are always at the BELMAR office and will be pleased to show you these comfortable homes, in a location free from dust, smoke and soot.

Come out today, or any day during the week, or write us and we'll call on you. Take Frankstown ave. or Homewood ave. cars. They both pass BELMAR PLACE.

A CHANCE to make hundreds is offered you. My investment business is paying large profits weekly. Five per cent weekly guaranteed, but I actually pay much more. Second successful year. $8.25 on every $100 per week made and paid last week to every customer on $25. Over $300 made and paid since January 1 on every $25 account. Weekly settlement of profits and limited patronage being the privilege you buy money is invested. My 20 years' experience and my leading representative position places my operations at the head of all competitors. I have never lost one dollar for any customer. I publish this statement broadcast and will pay $7,000 to anyone who can disprove it, indorsed by press and public everywhere. References of hundreds of satisfied clients furnished; letters handled everywhere. Work with me five years and you'll be independent. My proposition has no equal. Some agents making $100 to $200 weekly, and many making at the rate of $2,000 yearly without interfering with their business. Our 1903 out and write today for my prospectus. Free. Gen. P. Fowler, 2 West 104th st., New York city.

COMMON LAW MARRIAGE IS THE BASIS OF DECISION

Judge Miller's First Opinion Knocks Out the Claim of Catherine Kurtz Who Wanted Widow's Share of Jacob Breninen's Estate.

Judge J. J. Miller, in orphans court, yesterday handed down his first opinion in the matter of estate of John Brennen, deceased. The opinion follows:

Catherine Kurtz first presented her claim against the decedent's estate for services while in his employment from August, 1897, to October, 1900, the death of the decedent, at the rate of $5 a week. After considerable testimony had been taken, leave was granted to withdraw her claim for services, and to present her claim as the common law wife of the decedent on the ground that as such wife she was entitled to widow's distributive share of his estate. It being agreed that the testimony taken and to be taken should have reference to her claim in this latter capacity.

From the testimony of a number of witnesses examined the following facts are well founded: That during the time set forth in the foregoing period she was known as the wife of the decedent; that from the very beginning she assumed his name; that she was so addressed; that she was so recognized by the neighbors in the vicinity; that the decedent's own children were led to believe she was their stepmother; that during all of this period she occupied the same apartments with the decedent; that they were reputed to be husband and wife. The decedent before his death stated to his children he and the claimant were not married.

These further facts are found: That at the time this relationship began she was the wife of Adolph Kurtz, and continued his legal wife until divorced, in January of 1898.

The facts of the marriage relationship are not marriage, but only circumstances from which a marriage might be presumed. No antecedent contract was shown; there is nothing in this case to show an agreement between the decedent and this claimant that they had entered into a marriage relationship. Without such an antecedent agreement first found, or which could be presumed from the facts, all of their subsequent relations are of no vail to establish the right of the claimant to share in the estate. Even if such an antecedent agreement, at about the time this relationship began, had been shown, it would have not availed. This claimant could not have entered into a marriage contract at that time. She had no power to enter into a second contract or marriage while a valid marriage was in existence.

This case is ruled by Hunts Ap., 88, Pa., 294, in which the facts are almost identical, except that there a marriage took place, but was illegal for the reason that the decedent at the time had a wife living from whom he had been separated, and which was not known to the claimant widow in that estate, at the time of the supposed marriage, and she was thus innocent of the wrong perpetrated upon her.

In this case the claimant knew and was bound to know that when she entered into this relationship with the decedent, and held herself out to be his wife, that it was an unlawful act, and that no marriage rights would be founded upon a relationship which began illegally.

Mr. Justice Paxton, in delivering the opinion in the above case, states: "The general rule is, that, a relation shown to have been illicit at its commencement is presumed to continue so until proof of change. Such a relation raises no presumption of marriage. In the case at bar the fact is found that the dwelling together was illicit at its commencement, and necessarily continued so down to the decree of divorce, and that there is not a marriage in fact between the date of the divorce and the death of the decedent."

Here, if anyone was deceived by the previous marriage of the claimant, it was the decedent and not the claimant. All that there is in this case is reputation of marriage, but there is no contract shown. No legal marriage could have taken place in the inception of this relationship and none is shown at any subsequent time, nor does the relationship which existed warrant a presumption of marriage. The claim is, therefore, denied.

Judge Miller also handed down an opinion in the matter of the estate of Frank E. Weld, upon a claim made by Mrs. Carrie Stevenson. The decedent died in the house of the claimant, where he was boarded, from alleged smallpox. Mrs. Stevenson filed a claim for services as a nurse and for goods destroyed by the health authorities. In part Judge Miller says:

Compensation for damages for the loss of the household goods would be a valid claim if this loss was the first result of the decedent's illness. But the testimony does not warrant this conclusion. The cause of the death of the decedent is certified to have been malignant scarlatina. The reason given for the destruction of the claimant's household goods is the existence of a different disease suffered by different people. The facts do not warrant the presumption that the proximate cause of the loss of these goods was the decedent's disease, nor under the testimony was it the remote cause. Assuming the certificate of death to state the facts, decedent's malady could not necessitate the destruction by burning of the claimant's property.

The payment for damage for the loss of goods is not allowed and the plaintiff is to receive $30 for services as a nurse.

Officials Must Show Cause.

The Pennsylvania Trust Co. obtained an order from Judge Elliott Rodgers directing that an alternative mandamus issue against all the officials of the borough of Sheraden who have anything to do with the awarding of contracts, to show cause why the trust company should not be paid $18,008 74 on two certificates of indebtedness of the borough. The trust company purchased the certificates from Oil Brothers, contractors, who constructed certain sewers in Sheraden. It is said the borough refuses to pay the principal or interest on the certificates. The preliminary writ is made returnable February 21.

Court's First Opinion.

Judge J. R. Macfarlane in common pleas court No. 1 yesterday handed down his first opinion. It was in the mandamus proceedings of John Dollman against Allegheny county for the payment of costs. The petitioner took an appeal from the report of a board of viewers; he was awarded a verdict of 6½ cents. The commissioners refused to pay the costs of the case. It was contended the county was liable under an old act. The court says these English statutes referred to are in force in Pennsylvania, but have no application to the proceedings in question. The petition is therefore denied.

HORSE THIEF SENT UP.

William Smith Got Two Years for Stealing $300 Animal—Hospital Nurse Sentenced for Larceny.

In criminal court yesterday a number of sentences were imposed on persons who were convicted or pleaded guilty. The most severe was given to William Smith, who was convicted of stealing a $300 horse from David Darr of Baldwin township. Smith was sent to the workhouse for two years.

Other sentences imposed were: Ludwig Nelson, formerly a nurse at Mercy hospital, convicted of stealing $120 from a hospital patient, sentenced to the workhouse for 10 months; Clyde Wade, pointing firearms, three months to the workhouse; Albert Nagle, larceny of 20 chickens, which he drove into the barn of John T. Knowland, at Ross Grove, in daylight and sacked the lot, five months to the workhouse. John Johnson, felonious assault and battery in cutting William Stefany with a razor, three months to the workhouse; Ella Armstrong, misdemeanor in abandoning her 2-year-old child, leaving it at the Pittsburgh and Allegheny Rescue home while she crossed the street for milk, one day to the workhouse; John Nolson, felonious assault and battery in cutting Bessie Friedman with a knife, five months to the workhouse; G. W. Holmes, malicious mischief in tearing up a lease, fined $75 and costs.

SHE WISHED HIM LUCK.

Wife Hoped Her Husband, With Some Other Woman, Would Have Happiness He Deserved.

The report of the commissioner in the divorce case of Philip Mueller against Magdalena Mueller was filed. They were married March 31, 1900, and separated July 30, 1900. It is alleged the respondent deserted the libellant and went to Mansfield, O., after which she wrote her husband a letter. In part the communication reads:

Such a life, with scolding and quarrels, I would not lead, and I thought this is the only and best way. It is better than a long life of quarreling. We were strangers to each other and our views did not agree. I hope you will have, with some other woman, the happiness that you deserve.

The answer of the respondent was filed in the divorce case of George W. McKendry against Pink McKendry. The respondent denies the charges in the bill of particulars and claims that it is untrue and scandalous. She also says she was compelled to withdraw from the house on account of her husband's abuse and cruelty.

LEGAL BRIEFS.

A bill in equity was filed by the borough of Elizabeth against the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad Company, to restrain it from making any excavations in First and Second streets of that borough. It is claimed the company has entered in the streets for the purpose of laying additional tracks without authority.

In the equity case of the borough of Esplen against the Ohio Connecting Railway Company, an injunction was granted restraining the defendant from building other than a steel bridge over Ridge street. It is also restrained from changing the grade of the street to a greater extent than two feet over the present grade.

On account of the absence from the city of George W. Guthrie, Controller John R. Larkin was given 15 days to amend his return to the mandamus proceedings growing out of the Highland reservoir case.

Shad Gwilliam entered suit against Joseph W. Mason, a broker, to recover an amount of money invested in stocks. The plaintiff claimed that Mason induced him to invest $3,515 in stocks on the representation that he was an agent for a member of the New York stock exchange. A capias was issued for the defendant.

WORKING AWAY QUIETLY.

B. & O. Engineers Finishing Port Perry-Hancock Cut-Off Plans.

Although nothing has been said recently, the Baltimore & Ohio has been steadily advancing its project for a cut-off between Pittsburgh and the seaboard, which will give that road the shortest route and the lowest grade from Pittsburgh and the west to tidewater. Additional details are gradually becoming known, although the whole is kept under considerable mystery as yet. The route will be from Port Perry, where the present main line will be left, to Hancock, where the Potomac river is to be bridged to rejoin the old line. The distance between the two points is over 150 miles. It is said that 50 miles will be saved by cutting a direct line, instead of running as now, via Cumberland. It is largely the old South Penn route that will be utilized. The lowest possible grade from anywhere for crossing the Allegheny mountains along this survey.

From Allegheny to Elwood City the improved route is under contemplation for work in the spring. Two surveys have been made which offer almost equal advantages. Both eliminate the Bakerstown hill, the only helper grade on the line. Several miles will be saved by the cut-off. From New Castle Junction west the improvements are now under construction. In all cases double-track lines will be built and the whole brought to the highest standard known.

BULL DRAGS PASSAIC FROM ITS STAGNATION

Red Golf Coat Starts Trouble and Town Turns Out to Corral Animal.

[SPECIAL TELEGRAM TO THE GAZETTE.]

PASSAIC, N. J., Feb. 7.—An angry bull, which terrorized hundreds of citizens of Passaic for the past two days, broke loose again this afternoon and for three hours thousands of people enjoyed a genuine wild west chase that covered five miles of city streets. Six shots were fired into the maddened animal before it was captured.

The bull broke out of the barn of its owner, David Minsky, Thursday night and has been hiding in the outskirts of the city ever since. This afternoon it wandered into the main avenue in Passaic, and before it had gone a block it had hurled a young woman with a red golf coat into a doorway. Half a dozen small boys were next sent flying through the air.

A dozen policemen and a hundred men and boys started out to corral the animal. Then the bull started a mad chase. He ran two miles, to the residence section of the city, plunged into Boynton's pond, swam to the other side, crashed through two wire fences and reached Franklin avenue, eluding his pursuers. The bull then turned into Main avenue again.

Here a man mounted a fence with a lasso. He was about to throw it when the bull charged. The man landed half a dozen feet away, badly bruised.

Citizens with rifles joined the hunt and acting on Police Chief Hendry's orders several shots were fired at the animal. This tended to enrage the beast, and he returned to the Passaic bridge section. Then five shots were fired into his body. The animal did not stop until three miles further up Main avenue, where he sank from exhaustion and was captured.

To Work Against Licenses.

Turtle Creek citizens will fight hard against the efforts that are being made to have the prohibitory liquor law repealed. Justice William H. Semmens, A. O. Tinstman and Rev. J. Elmer Bittle were appointed a committee at a mass meeting last Friday to go to Harrisburg to work against the bill when it comes up in the house Tuesday. The committee will carry along petitions from hundreds of citizens, the school board, councilmen and others protesting against the repeal. Turtle Creek has been a local option town for 10 years.

THE RIGHT THING.

A New Catarrh Cure, Which is Rapidly Coming to the Front.

For many years, Red Gum, Blood root and Hydrastin have been recognized as standard remedies for catarrhal troubles, but they have always been given separately and only very recently an ingenious chemist succeeded in combining them, together with other antiseptics into a pleasant, effective tablet.

Druggists sell the remedy under the name of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets and it has met with remarkable success in the cure of nasal catarrh, bronchial and throat catarrh and in catarrh of the stomach.

Mr. F. N. Benton, whose address is care of Clark house, Troy, N. Y., says: "When I run up against anything that is good I like to tell people of it. I have been troubled with catarrh more or less for some time. Last winter more than ever. Tried several so-called cures, but did not get any benefit from them. About six weeks ago I bought a 50-cent box of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets and I am glad to say that they have done wonders for me and I do not hesitate to let all my friends know that Stuart's Catarrh Tablets are the right thing."

Mr. George J. Casaova of Hotel Griffon, West Ninth street, New York city, writes: "I have commenced using Stuart's Catarrh Tablets and already they have given better results than any catarrh cure I have ever tried."

A leading physician of Pittsburgh advises the use of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets in preference to any other treatment for catarrh of head and throat or stomach.

He claims they are far superior to inhalers, salves, lotions or powder, and are much more convenient and pleasant to take and are so harmless that little children can take them with benefit, as they contain no opiate, cocaine or any poisonous drug.

NEW PUBLICATIONS. NEW PUBLICATIONS. NEW PUBLICATIONS.

A MAGNIFICENT LIBRARY OF THE WORLD'S STANDARD WORKS.

Every book lover desires to possess a library of the world's standard works of fiction in an attractive and enduring form. Heretofore but few were able to procure such a collection of books, owing to their great cost.

We are the first and only publishers to have realized the demand for such a library, sold at a POPULAR PRICE ON EASY MONTHLY PAYMENTS.

WHY WE SELL BOOKS SO CHEAP.

During the forty-eight years of our publishing of books we have never lost sight of the fact that LOW PRICES ATTRACT A MULTITUDE OF BUYERS. Our motto has always been: "RIGHT BOOKS AT RIGHT PRICES," and this has been the keystone of our success. We have built up the greatest book business in the world—selling millions of volumes every year, manufactured in the most complete printing establishment in the world.

In order to retain our skilled labor and keep our presses busy during the dull summer months (when publishers generally are reducing their forces) we printed a special edition of THE WORLD'S STANDARD WORKS OF FICTION. This grand collection of books embraces fifty volumes SELECTED FICTION—BOOKS THAT HAVE STOOD THE TEST OF TIME. The edition is LIMITED and while it lasts we will sell the sets ON EASY MONTHLY PAYMENTS, at a price that is but slightly above the cost of making of the books. ORDERS MUST BE SENT IN PROMPTLY TO INSURE THEIR BEING FILLED.

Over 15,000 Pages of Best Fiction.

Each of the fifty volumes in this grand library is a complete story by a famous novelist, whose name will live as long as English literature. The make-up of the volumes is in every way worthy of their contents. The paper is of a selected quality, the binding a rich, dark, red-ribbed silk cloth, with titles and authors' names heavily stamped in gold.

As each volume is complete in itself and there is no indication that it is a part of a set, the books can be used for presentation purposes. One or more volumes make a most acceptable gift.

WE WANT TO CONVINCE YOU.

To prove the worth of this Library we offer to send the entire set, all transportation charges prepaid, and let you examine the books in your home. If you find them as represented, you pay in easy monthly payments. If you don't want the books, you return them at our expense. YOU TAKE NO RISK.

50 Volumes of Standard Works. Monthly Payments of $1.00

Restores Eyesight

"Actina," a Wonderful Discovery which Cures Diseased Eyes, No Matter Whether Chronic or Acute, Without Cutting or Drugging.

There is no need for cutting, drugging or probing the eye for any form of disease, for a new system of treating afflictions of the eye has been discovered whereby all torturous and barbarous methods are eliminated. This wonderful treatment takes the form of a Pocket Battery and is known as "Actina." It is purely a home treatment and self-administered by the patient. There is no risk of experimenting, as thousands of people have been cured of blindness, failing eyesight, cataracts, granulated lids and other afflictions of the eye through this grand discovery, when ordinary oculists termed the cases incurable. This wonderful remedy also makes the use of spectacles unnecessary as it not only removes the weakened and unnatural conditions of the eye, but gives it a clear vision.

James Julian, 24 Ryan's Lane, North Adams, Mass., writes: "In using your 'Actina,' I must say that it has improved my sight wonderfully and I believe the Actina is saving my sight. I unhesitatingly recommend it to any one suffering with their eyes."

Mr. A. D. Howe, Tully, N. Y., writes: "Actina" has removed cataracts from both my eyes. I can read well without any glasses, am 65 years old."

Robert Baker, 80 Dearborn st., Chicago, Ill., writes: "I should have been blind had I not used 'Actina.'"

Rev. W. C. Goodwin, Moline, Kans., writes: I think "Actina" a marvelous discovery. It cured my afflicted eye after the best oculists said it had to be removed.

Hundreds of other names can be sent on application. "Actina" is purely a home treatment and self-administered by the patient, and is sent on trial, post paid. If you will send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Ass'n, Dept. 97, st., 929 Walnut st., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely free a valuable book, Prof. Wilson's Treatise on the Eye and on Disease in General.

The Writings of Paul de Kock

The First and Only Complete and Uniform Editions of This Famous French Author in the English Language.

His Celebrated Masterpieces and

All of His Inimitable Novels, Tales and Vaudevilles.

Translated by Mary Hanford Ford. Preface and Introduction by the Author's Friend, M. Jules Claretie.

FIVE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS

Have been invested in this work, a sum which far exceeds that expended upon any single publication in the history of the world, except the original Encyclopaedia Brittanica.

The books are printed from 12-Point Old Style Caslon type, ten tons of which were made expressly for our use.

The Cost of the Printing was more than $75,000; of the Illustrations, more than $150,000, and of the Illuminations and other Decorations, upward of $100,000.

Among the artists represented are A. B. Wenzel, Orson Lowell, William Glackens, Albert de Ford Pitney, Albert Sterner, I. A. Keller, John Sloan, E. Boyd Smith, Walter Russell, Jacques Reich, F. C. White, A. B. Williams, Sydney Smith and Louis Maynell.

Paul de Kock has been called the Dickens and Smollett of France. The truth is he was the most fertile and popular novelist of his time; his humor was akin to that of Smollett and Sterne, but there was an individuality in his work which was shared by no contemporary.

WHAT VON STERNBERG SAID BEFORE HE WAS MUZZLED

Something About Curious Origin of German Ambassador's Family.

WHAT THE KAISER'S AMBASSADOR THINKS:

American Press	A-1.
Reporters	"Very scientific."
Report that he unseated Holleben	Absurd fake.
Von Holleben—the man and diplomat	A-1.
Holleben—judge of poetry (Kipling)	Nothing to do with it.
The Holleben of today	Too old and ill.
Roosevelt	Man like Kaiser.

EACH OF THEM GREATER THAN ANYBODY ELSE.

Venezuela	That's easy.
Monroe doctrine	A pacific measure.
American public opinion	Must be reckoned with.
President's councillors	A-1.
American statesmen in general	A-1.

(Special Correspondence Sunday Gazette.)

LEIPZIG, Jan. 24.—Baron Speck von Sternberg, the kaiser's new envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, did not enlighten your correspondent as to whether or not his majesty selected him for the post because of his supposed fitness "to work the president," as suggested, but in all other respects expressed himself with a frankness that would be almost undiplomatic if it were not the essence of diplomacy, or due to "all highest command."

His first bow, as is fit, was for the American press.

"I esteem the American papers most highly," said his lordship. "They are not so reckless or so disrespectful as their European colleagues make them out to be.

"The first duty of the press, as I take it, is to give correct information; every newspaper doing so aids the purposes of an honest government.

"The principal American papers are represented by young men, noted for enterprise and energy, characteristics that usually are wedded to truthfulness.

Sometimes They Prevaricate.

"Most of the newspaper men with whom I came in contact on the other side surprised and charmed me by their sound judgment, quick understanding and excellent schooling. All seemed to be possessed of considerable scientific and political information.

"Of course there are exceptions," continued the baron. "This report, for instance, is false word for word—too self-evidently false to call for detailed denial."

The baron showed your correspondent a cabled extract from an article in the New York Commercial Advertiser, setting forth that, according to semi-official information, Holleben's recall was due to the machinations of certain personalities in Germany who had been after his job for some time. As to Baron Speck, he had been a rival of Von Holleben for many years. Some time ago Holleben had succeeded in getting the baron transferred to Calcutta, but the baron's friends kept hammering away at Holleben in Berlin, and now the baron was on top.

"An absurd fake," repeated his lordship with fine disdain. I have the highest esteem for Herr Von Holleben, who is an excellent official of great intelligence. I would be the very last man to doubt his ability, for I had occasion to see him solve some of the most intricate diplomatic imbroglios. It was a pleasure to co-operate with so eminent a diplomat, I assure you."

The baron continued: "On the other hand, it is not to be wondered at when a gentleman of 70, like Herr Von Holleben, does not feel alert enough, at a given moment, to attend to certain business of the vastest possible importance, such as the Venezuelan affair. Holleben was ill, and couldn't attend to business. That's all.

"As to the Kipling affair, the ambassador had nothing whatever to do with it."

"You like Washington, do you not?" asked the correspondent.

"I do," replied the minister enthusiastically. "I have many friends in Washington, and know all about its ins and outs.

Roosevelt Like Kaiser.

"As to President Roosevelt, I delight in his friendship. The baroness and I were his guests only a few weeks ago, and were charmed with the kind hospitality extended to us.

"The president possesses wonderful working powers—in that respect he can only be likened to our kaiser. These two gentlemen are capable of more work than any other two human beings I know of. They can do almost the impossible. From morn to night they are always working under high pressure."

"And Venezuela?" asked the correspondent.

"Pshaw," said his lordship airily, "the Venezuelan business is not pregnant with great difficulties for me, if the men I have to deal with are of the Roosevelt sort."

The Monroe Doctrine.

"What about the Monroe doctrine, your lordship?" asked the correspondent, emboldened by the way the ambassador turned himself inside out.

"The Monroe doctrine," replied Baron Speck, "is an unwritten law with the Americans, but President Roosevelt, as declared by him time and again, regards it as a pacific measure. That just now it has called forth so much argument seems to indicate that the Americans are trying to probe its practical bearing on international relations."

The baron again emphasized the pleasure he felt in his American mission. "It's no sinecure, though," he added, "seeing that the great masses of the American people are bitterly opposed to the German-English alliance. And, again, in the United States public opinion is a thing to be reckoned with.

"But," he continued, smiling serenely, "I have the fullest confidence in President Roosevelt's love of fair play, and as to his constitutional councilors, I always found them men of tact and sound judgment. So I am quite sure that my forthcoming stay in Washington will be as pleasant as my former experience in that beautiful city. I never worked with such zeal and such satisfaction as in the United States, I assure you, because I found the government always open and honest, absolutely so. I never had any fault to find with American politics, either; in short, everything tended for agreeable and businesslike relations.

"You ask about my experiences with American political personages and statesmen?" repeated his lordship. "All American government officials and statesmen with whom I ever came in official contact, were persons of absolute integrity and blameless honor, intellectual, energetic and businesslike. I never encountered any intrigues or underhand deals."

As Others See Him.

Diplomatic circles continue to regard Baron Speck's appointment as most extraordinary, mainly on account of his lordship's marriage alliance. To be sure, he has a most charming wife, but she is an American, Miss Langham of Kentucky. Up to now German diplomats married to foreigners were booked for early retirement, never for an upward career. It will be remembered that Herr von Brand, the ablest diplomat Germany ever had in China, was abruptly retired when he took an American for wife.

The kaiser is of opinion that his servants in the diplomatic branch of the government should seek life partners among the aristocracy, particularly if they are noble born themselves, and of those who do not, few make any headway as diplomats.

Baron Speck's departure from this rule was the more noticeable as he is not a nobleman of ancient lineage, and according to accepted notions, should, therefore, try to seek relatives among the great noble houses.

The Specks have a handle to their name only since 1782, when the prince-elector of Saxony conferred a degree of nobility on a certain army contractor, at the same time permitting him to add "von Sternberg" to his plebeian nick-name of "Speck," "bacon." In the king's English.

Old man Speck, so called, first of the von Sternbergs, made his money by furnishing "speck" (bacon) to the soldiers of Frederick the Great during the seven years' war, he was a Hebrew, and Hebrews had no surnames in those days.

A Jocular Nickname.

This particular Hebrew was called Speck for fun, because, in defiance of the law of Moses, he handled pork—whether American pork among other, history does not recount.

Anyhow, Abraham Speck, so called, gathered in considerable shekels, and the Dresden court, always hard up for coin, offered him the "Von," a commodity then far more highly esteemed than now.

At the same time he was "graciously permitted" to buy a landed estate, which was also a boon in those days, for Jews were not allowed to own farms.

After paying right well for the privileges extended him by the prince the "von" and permission to use his own money as he pleased—the newly created nobleman bought the estate of Lutzschena, near Liepsig, which has remained in the family ever since. And to this circumstance your correspondent is indebted for the interview above recorded. Baron Speck von Sternberg went to Lutzschena to set matters straight before sailing for New York, and was waylaid and caught at the Kaiserhof in this city when he was about to return to Berlin.

Lutzschena, by the way, is what President Roosevelt would call a "bully" place, with fertile acres and a fine castle, containing some Italian masterpieces of note.

The estate brings in about $12,500 a year, owing to the really good beer brewed at the palace. President Castro should make a note of that and order some "yet anretty."

First of the Family Furnished Bacon to Army of Frederick the Great.

SECRETS OF THE DEEP SEA WILL BE UNVEILED

SUBMARINE WORK-BOAT WILL RAISE TREASURE

Torpedoes Become Harmless and Crossing the Waters Devoid of Peril—Vast Deposits of Coal and Many New Varieties of Food Fish.

BY PROF. CARLO IBERTI, PH. D.
(Special Correspondence Sunday Gazette.)

GENOA, ITALY, Jan. 28.—"After the torpedo, the destroyer, after the submarine boat, comes the hydroscope, making torpedoes, submarine mines and boats useless," said Guiseppi Pino, the inventor of the apparatus capable of flooding the floor of the ocean with daylight, or its equivalent.

"The hydroscope," he continued, "which has had a full trial by the Italian naval office and a company of large capitalists, and which two weeks from now will be tried at Kiel, under the eyes of the kaiser—the hydroscope is a lightgiver that penetrates water to an unusual depth.

"The apparatus used by the government experts off the coast of Genoa covered 4,600 square feet of ocean bed, and the light was so brilliant that everything contained within the limits of the fluid territory was perceptible to the naked eye—everything, whether stationary on the floor of the sea or floating between that and the surface of the water. With the aid of this light fishes and worms the size of a pin head were photographed, as well as beams, sunken craft, and pieces of glass and rubbish carried out there by the tide.

"Yet the apparatus used was only a small and cheap affair. The government, quite naturally, distrusted by assurances; I had to stand all the cost, and I am but a poor civil engineer.

"The apparatus could be 10 times or 100 times enlarged if necessary, while its usefulness increases in proportion, yet the expense would be trifling considering the results to be obtained.

Sailing Made Safe.

"The thought that gave the first impetus to this invention was the hope of making the ocean, its highways and byways, perfectly safe. No more ships wrecks on account of rocks, floating wreckage and collisions. The captain and navigator of the future will be master of the waters he sails. Neptune cannot play tricks on him with rocks, sand banks, flats, shallow water, wreckage, and what not, for the lookout can easily detect such by the aid of the hydroscope. At the same time the engineer will be able, at all times, to inspect the bottom of his boat.

"After the foregoing it is almost unnecessary to refer to the hydroscope's influence on naval warfare. Torpedoes, submarine mines and boats were invented to approach the enemy by stealth, but the hydroscope is more powerful than 10,000 search lights, and beside turns the water under and about the ship, for almost any desired distance, into a flood of light to such an extent that even a herring could not approach a ship's bottom or sides within 5,500 feet without captain and lookout seeing it.

Pacific Benefits.

"But personally I lay less stress upon the hydroscope's relation to warfare, than upon its pacific mission. Warfare will be abolished sooner or later; the world nowadays pins its hope to peace and progress.

"Above all, my invention, like Marconi's, will bring the nations nearer together, for the hydroscope removes to a large extent the present impediments to cable laying and shipping.

"National economists have expressed the fear that, some day or other, the world might perish on account of lack of food and coal, as a result of over population. But the world need not die if the food and fuel treasures buried under the waters are placed at its disposal, as the hydroscope proposes to do. I have made about 200 descents to the bottom of the ocean in my submarine working boat—of which later on—and I assure you, our fishery commissioners and natural scientists have not the slightest idea of the amount of fish in existence. Myself and companions have brought up from the bottom of the ocean over 50 kinds of eatable sea food totally unknown to present day books, aquariums and professional fisherman. Very frequently the flocks of fish surrounding us at great depts were so dense as to obscure the outlook from the illuminated windows.

"The hydroscope discovers new sea food, the submarine working boat lifts the treasures and hungry millions can be satisfied at a trifling cost. But there is more than fish in the sea. I discovered coal mines at the ocean bottom that make the properties of the "divine" Baer look like 50 cents; and, mind you, such mines are free to all, they cannot be Morganized, for ocean highways are international, they are national territory, upon which no monopolist can lay his hand, "divine" or otherwise."

"The submarine working boat is another invention of mine," continued Signor Pino, "and like the hydroscope it has been fully approved by the Italian naval authorities. Moreover, a company for its exploitation, with a capital stock of 10,000,000 francs, fully paid, has recently been formed."

Signor Pino handed your correspondent the official date concerning the submarine working boat, attested by the Rome naval office and by the municipality of Genoa. Here is the statement regarding "the trial of Signor Pino's submarine working boat in the gulf of Genoa:"

"The boat is 16 feet broad, 30 long and cigar-shaped. In outward appearance it differs not from the type of submarine boat introduced years ago. Its construction is steel—apparently one piece, like a cannon.

"This makes it possible for the ship to withstand any amount of pressure. The keel is fitted with wheels, facilitating movement on dry land and on the floor of the ocean.

"The sides of the ship are furnished with mechanical arms and hands worked from within. These arms and hands work like the human model. They can bend, withdraw and stretch like a man's arms. They can lift and grasp things like that of a mechanic with power a hundred times intensified.

Worked 290 Feet Down.

"With this ship Signor Pino and his crew descended into the gulf of Genoa at a spot where the water is 290 feet deep, according to the charts. The inventor did not know beforehand where the trial was to take place, nor was he aware of the fact that a boat had been sunk there by order of the secretary of the navy. "When the mayor of Genoa asked the inventor whether he was prepared to descend to a depth far beyond the working capacity of divers he agreed to the undertaking and his boat was gone fully 10 minutes. However, the spectators to the experiment were kept informed of his whereabouts by telephone." (It should be mentioned here that divers cannot work below a depth of 90 to 95 feet.)

"After 10 minutes Signor Pino's ship was heard and seen shooting to the surface of the water, carrying above its decks in the arms attached to the sides, the small boat sunk in that neighborhood by the marine authorities the day before.

"The naval expert who accompanied Signor Pino reported that by a peculiar new light the inventor carried, the floor of the gulf was lit up for the space of an eighth of a mile. They ran around on the bottom of the sea for some time, until they encountered the boat, subsequently raised to the surface. While Pino and his crew attended to the wreck by setting the arms in motion, an expert photographer commemorated their labors and other objects on his stock of films. The photographs were subsequently printed and proved revelations to the marine authorities as well as to the various scientists who have since examined them. They say such photographs, taken at great depths, will revolutionize hydrography, the zoology, mineralogy and botany of the sea and will greatly aid geological investigation.

Nearly 200 Similar Trips.

"Since that was written," said Signor Pino, "I made some 200 more dives with my boat, sometimes remaining at the bottom from 10 to 12 hours. But such is possible only (with the present boat), when no more than two men go down. If there are more, too much air, food, etc., must be carried.

"The boat travels upward and downward at the rate of 11½ feet a second. It can be instantly stopped at any depth desired, and travels on the bottom of the sea, on on land, on wheels set in motion by an electric screw.

"The hydroscope allows us to penetrate the awful darkness that rules at great depths. I could find a pin among the coral reefs and fern forests. I have gone down as low as 500 feet and have performed much satisfactory work at a depth of 450 feet. And this is only the beginning.

"And the company of which you spoke as controlling the submarine worker, what are its immediate objects?" asked the correspondent.

"My dear sir," repited the inventor, "you cannot seriously ask me to discuss business secrets with you, but I will refer you to a few facts patent to all.

"Some little time ago pearl fisheries, yielding 16,000,000 francs a year, were discovered by the merest accident in Japan waters. Accidents, at least lucky accidents, are rare, as you know. What would you say to exploiting certain waters, known to contain pearls, by way of the hydroscope and lifting the treasures with the submarine worker?"

Sunken Treasure Ships.

"Again, statistics prove that within the limits of the civilized world 180 ships become total wrecks every month. The hydroscope can locate them and the submarine worker can float them, or at least fish up their cargo.

"And, speaking of sunken ships, I remind you of the fact that the British admiralty court offered a million francs for absolute proof as to the author of the Victoria shipwreck. The Victoria was a very large and valuable steamer, sunk off Tripoli. The hydroscope can furnish such proof and will do so as soon as negotiations with the British courts are concluded. And, after that, the hydroscope will play a decisive part in all the admiralty courts of the world, I warrant you."

"Finally, there is an adventurous side to the case," added the signor, lighting a fresh cigar.

"The ocean floor, as I take it, is the greatest treasure chest in the world. Milliards are deposited there, year after year, and, mind you, that sort of thing has been going on for as many years perhaps as Morgan, Rockefeller, the Astors and Vanderbilts have pennies in their possession. The riches of whole continents are lying on the ocean floor, the riches of worlds we know of and of others we do not know of.

Ocean Yielding Gold.

"In August, 1898, I happened to be in London when news reached there that a bushel of gold pieces had been thrown up on Cornwall strand after one of the great storms to which this southwestern peninsula is subject. The coin was adorned with portraits of various Spanish kings who reigned in the eighteenth century. The latest found was dated 1780. Where did they come from, do you suppose? From a Spanish galleon that foundered off the coast of Cornwall in 1781. The ship was laden with gold in coin and bullion, intended for the bank of England.

"A Spanish king sent it to London owing to riots in his capital, and every few years Neptune gives up some of the treasures he swallowed on that occasion prior to the French revolution.

"I violate no confidence when I tell you that it is our intention to hunt for just such treasure by hydroscopes and lift same by the submarine worker. The ocean, as I said before, is full of them.

"Readers of American history know all about the British frigate "De Brook," foundered in American waters in 1798. The De Brook had about $5,000,000 in gold and silver coin, captured from the Spaniards. These are still at the bottom of the sea, together with the bodies of 200 prisoners of war in irons, which the De Brook likewise carried. God willing, I will find them with my hydroscope and submarine worker combined—the millions.

The Bourgogne.

"Do you happen to remember the value of the Bourgogne's cargo? It amounted to 22,000,000 francs. At the bottom of Magellan straits there lies a ship, the name of which I have forgotten, worth $625,000,000. The straits are very difficult to navigate, but the hydroscope will illuminate the treasures that lie below, and unless they have dropped to the bottom of the earth we will find them by and by.

"But we are not after gold alone. There are many things at the bottom of the sea that will benefit humanity far more than yellow metal. Food stuffs and fuel, as already mentioned, and things liable to solve great economic, historic and scientific riddles."

The inventor consulted his watch and your correspondent reluctantly prepared to go.

"What would you say to the discovery of Sodom and Gomorrha?" he said at the door. "If I find these biblical cities, you shall have the first photographs. And, by the way, I will tell you all about the Dead Sea, too."

BEER FOR SEWAGE.

It Is High-Quality Beer Too. But Only Government Inspectors May Taste It.

(Special Correspondence of The Gazette.)

LONDON, Feb. 1.—At Manchester a brewery has been established where they make beer of a superior quality—and then carefully throw every drop of it away. Just as much pains are taken in making the beer as if it were destined, like that brewed at Burton last summer, for the table of the king himself—but it's inevitable fate is to be poured into the sewers, with a ruthlessness that would delight the heart of Mrs. Nation.

The explanation of the rather surprising procedure is that the beer thus sacrificed is the product of a sort of school of brewing run by the municipality of Manchester. This provincial city is a progressive place, and some time ago it decided to start a municipal school of technology, at which every trade practiced in the north of England should be taught practically. When the school was opened it was found that quite a number of its students were anxious to learn the brewing business, so it was decided to add a model brewery, on a small scale, to the rest of the technical equipment.

When the matter was referred to the government, however, the Manchester city fathers were told that they could not be allowed to start their miniature brewery unless they would agree that every particle of its output should be destroyed. And, at regular intervals since the brewery was started, an excise inspector has dropped in to make sure that there is no mistake about this. The saddest part of the whole story is that experts who have sampled the beverage made by the municipal students of brewing say that it is first class.

—Reports from Italy state that the phylloxera is working ravages among the vineyards of that country, and that there will be an unprecedented demand for American vines with which to graft the old ones.

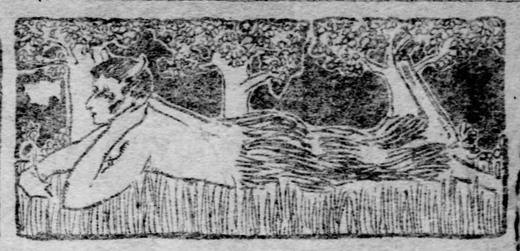
BOOKS and BOOKMEN

BY GEORGE SEIBEL



Lore of Precious Stones.

BOOKS intended for the guidance of men in some particular calling are not usually of much interest to those outside. The Boiler Maker's Manual or The Locomotive Builder's Companion have no fascination for the people who do not rivet boilers or assemble locomotives. Not so Mr. Cattelle's volume, which is primarily intended as a reference book for jewelers. Every owner and lover of gems will appreciate it. Delvers after the curious, and those that revel in romantic lore will find much to delight them, while the bibliophile will rejoice over the rich green of its morocco binding and the exquisite typography of its pages.

Perhaps the almost universal interest in gems is due to their combination of pecuniary and esthetic values. Because of their beauty, because that beauty is the joint work of nature and art, because it is almost the only "thing of beauty that is a joy forever," precious stones are prized above marbles that crumble, paintings that crack and fade, poems that are the prey of commentators soon after the poets are eaten by worms. It is not alone the love of dazzle and display that leads men to purchase jewels. I have been told that Henry Ward Beecher carried loose diamonds in his purse, much as a school boy carries marbles in his pocket.

Other people besides the great divine find pleasure in the magic glow of gems. One need not wonder that Mr. Cattelle, in compiling what one might suspect to be a dry technical manual, is touched with poetic fire. "The shifting steps in the path of the sun across the sea to a far-off horizon; the limpid light of new-strung dewdrops among the grasses of the valley; the dance of moonbeams over crusted snows, or the shimmer of frosted trees under a cloudless sky, are all caught and fixed, for our enjoyment at will, in the diamond." As Mr. Cattelle elsewhere says that the adamantine glitter of the diamond cannot be described in words, perhaps this comes as near to it as any other.

According to Mr. Cattelle, the stones accounted precious are the diamond, ruby, pearl, sapphire, emerald, oriental cat's-eye, opal, turquoise, alexandrite and spinel. Others on the borderland between precious and semi-precious are the andalusite, aquamarine, golden beryl, hiddenite, olivine, tourmaline, zircon, and the finer varieties of amethyst, topaz and garnet.

His book tells a vast deal about these stones—whence they come, what they are, how to distinguish them. A striking illustration of the book's completeness in this respect is furnished by two complementary chapters on the colors of precious stones. One is a table of stones and the colors in which they occur, the other is a table of colors and the stones in which they occur.

While far from complete in respect to the romance and history of precious stones, the monograph contains many interesting chapters. Truly is it said that never a stone was cut that more or less of romance did not gather about it; many have seen great tragedies, and there is not a string in the gamut of human emotions which has not sung at some time or place to their fascinations.

One is reminded of the Regent diamond, valued at 12,000,000 francs, which Napoleon wore in the pommel of his sword; of the Florentine, weighing 133 1-2 carats, which Charles the Bold lost at the battle of Granson; of the Black Prince ruby which Henry V. wore in his helmet at the battle of Agincourt.

None of the historic gems, however, have such a halo of romance as the first of the diamonds found in the South African fields. A Boer boy amused himself by gathering and playing with the pretty stones on his mother's farm. One day a neighbor became interested and was given one of the pretty stones. It afterward sold for £500. That was the beginning of the De Beers syndicate and the Boer war.

The Du Toits Pan, the first of the four celebrated mines, was discovered when a farmer found a number of diamonds in the walls of his house, which he had plastered with mud from a neighboring pond.

Diamonds have been found in the United States, as Mr. Cattelle notes—in Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, Oregon, Idaho, Montana, and it is claimed also in Kentucky and Indiana. The only notable find was the "Dewey," turned up in 1855 by a laborer's spade in the streets of Manchester, Va. It weighed 23¾ carats rough, and a little over 11½ after cutting.

Mr. Cattelle enumerates many curious superstitions associated with various gems. It will reassure the timid wearers of opals that the Greeks had faith in the power of this stone to secure for its owner universal good-will, while thieves wore it because those that stood by the wearer could not see or did not mind what was being done.

A bloodstone, it was believed, would make water boil, and the steam would obscure the sun like an eclipse. The same gem, anointed with the marigold's juice, would render its wearer invisible.

The old writer says that a ruby, if danger approaches its wearer, will turn black and resume its natural color when the danger is past. The king of Pegu, in India, was fabled to possess a ruby which would illuminate a dark room as brilliantly as could the sun.

This last superstition is paralleled in a scientific experiment by Edwin W. Streeter. He "exposed an orange-colored diamond to the prolonged action of a powerful lime-light and then removed it to a dark room, when the phosphorescence was sufficient to light up the apartment."

Thus there is shown to be a real foundation for at least one popular notion regarding the diamond. Another belief—that it is so hard that it can be laid upon an anvil and struck with a hammer without danger to the stone—has wrought the destruction of many beautiful gems.

Mr. Cattelle suggests a far more satisfactory and less costly method of distinguishing imitations from real gems. Imitations, he says, are warmer to the touch, and a drop of water flattens and spreads over the surface as it does not on the genuine. An aluminum point will leave a mark on the surface of an imitation, when drawn over it; it will not do so on the precious stones.

Another test is not so convenient, but is hardly needed. The diamond is transparent to the X-rays; glass is opaque to them. The prospective diamond purchaser who cannot trust his jeweler nor his eyes had better sally forth equipped with a Roentgen apparatus.

The chapters on the stones of the months, on the symbolic meaning of gems, on the apostle stones, and on the breast plate of the Jewish high priest will interest many. Others will find food for thought in the tables of imports, which show that in 1867 there were brought into the country cut diamonds valued at $1,317,420, while in 1902 the imports were $12,732,620, besides $6,134,883 of uncut stones.

The political economist will find one paragraph especially suggestive which tells how Dom Pedro paid the interest on the Brazilian debt in diamonds and so glutted the market that the price fell nearly one-half. Our civil war sent the price up 25 per cent, the Franco-Prussian war sent it up 10 per cent more. The London syndicate controlling the African markets has engineered its interests so shrewdly that the price has been advanced fully 50 per cent during the last three years.

All of which is calculated to induce the melancholy reflection that with coal at its present altitude economical seekers after personal adornment cannot even afford to wear chunks of anthracite, nor can the chilly man in moderate circumstances afford to burn diamonds at present rates.

Treasured Volume From Shakespeare's Library

IN SHAKESPEARE'S little library there was one book that he prized above all others. He had Holinshed's Chronicles for his English history, Froissart to guide him across the Channel, North's Plutarch for his Greeks and Romans, Boccaccio's "Decamerone" for his Italians, but of all these none was so well beloved as the wise and genile Montaigne, in the translation of John Florio. From "Sieur Michel" he got those profound reflections upon life and death that make "Hamlet" the world's greatest philosophical drama; there he got that broad tolerance which makes "Measure for Measure" the world's keenest satire against hypocrisy, 60 years before Moliere's "Tartufe." And the old courtier's description of the ideal commonwealth, in "The Tempest," is borrowed almost verbation from Montaigne:

> I' the commonwealth I would by contraries
> Execute all things; for no kind of traffic
> Would I admit; no name of magistrate;
> Letters should not be known; riches, poverty
> And use of service, none; contract, succession
> Bourn, bound of land, tilth, vineyard, none;
> No use of metal, corn, or wine, or oil;
> No occupation; all men idle, all,
> And women, too; but innocent and pure;
> No sovereignty—
>
> All things in common nature should produce
> Without sweat or endeavor: treason, felony,
> Sword, pike, knife, gun, or need of any engine
> Would I not have, but nature should bring forth,
> Of its own kind, all foizon, all abundance,
> To feed my innocent people.

> It is a nation that hath no kind of traffic, no knowledge of letters, no intelligence of numbers, no name of magistrate, nor of politic superiority; no use of service, of riches, or of poverty; no contracts, no successions, no dividences; no occupation, but idle; no respect of kindred, but common; no apparel, but natural; no manuring of lands; no use of wine, corn, or metal. The very words that import lying, falsehood, treason, dissimulation, covetousness, envy, detraction and pardon were never heard amongst them.

It is well known that one of the few examples of Shakespeare's handwriting preserved to us is his name in a copy of Florio's Montaigne, dated 1603, and now preserved in the British Museum. There is some doubt as to the genuineness of the signature—even so astute a critic as Brandes hesitates, but there is no doubt that Shakespeare knew the wise and witty French causeur and thought highly of his philosophy.

It was doubtless the influence and the example of Montaigne that led Shakespeare to withdraw from the world in the zenith of his fame, and to spend his last years in Stratford's rural quietude. "We should build for ourselves a treasure chamber," says Montaigne, "which belongs to ourselves alone, where we guard our true freedom, our refuge and solitude, where we may be our true selves. We have lived for others long enough, let us give the rest of life unto ourselves. We would shake off the fetters that chain us to the world and make us strangers to ourselves. 'It is man's highest good to find himself.'"

Such thoughts doubtless induced Shakespeare's retirement in 1600, as they had led Montaigne himself to withdraw to his estates, where he lived his life unruffled by the religious and political upheavals of France. The wars of the League against Henry of Navarre vexed him as little as the bloody massacre of St. Bartholomew. He had talked with Tasso in an Italian madhouse, and as burgomaster of Bordeaux had seen his fill of folly and wrong; so when the pestilence devastated unhappy France he sought a secure haven on his acres and a certain consolation in his philosophy.

His tolerance was so broad that both Catholics and Huguenots regarded him with distrust. That did not vex him, so long as they let him alone. This spirit affords another parallel with Shakespeare, who, though he disliked the Puritans, once had a Puritan preacher as guest in his home. So, too, as Shakespeare has been claimed for a Catholic by Chateaubriand, a recent writer, Leon de la Briere, has claimed Montaigne as a devotee. A wag has facetiously suggested that Briere should follow up his little volume, "Montaigne Chretien," with one on "Voltaire Jesuite."

Montaigne was probably as much Christian as Cicero, with whom he was fluently familiar from his sixth year, and for whose thoughts on Friendship he has furnished the noblest parallel of later times. In fact, it might more reasonably be contended, in view of Montaigne's maxim, "What do I know?" that he is the father of modern agnosticism. He was a skeptic, generous and kindly, not fierce and vindictive, like Voltaire—but what mattered all these things to him, what Rome or the Reformation? Let the world wag, men bargain and buy, fight and steal—his world was on his farm and in his library, where the greatest thinkers of all ages have not disdained "to smoke a pipe with Sieur Montaigne."

PORTRAIT FRONTISPIECE FROM THE NEW EDITION OF FLORIO'S MONTAIGNE.

Indeed, he must have been, as Mme. de Sevigne has said, "a charming man and excellent company," if we may believe an anecdote he tells about himself. It seems that he was riding through a forest with a small party of friends, when they were ambushed by a band of robbers, armed with arquebuses and masked. They dragged the philosopher into the forest, robbed him of all his belongings and then debated whether to kill him or hold him for a ransom. The latter proposal prevailed and Montaigne rode with them as their prisoner. But they had ridden only a little way when the leader of the band gave him his liberty and restored to him such of his property as could be recovered. Then the astonished sage was told that he owed his release to his pleasant countenance and fearless frankness.

Montaigne, with the instinct of a latter-day journalist alert for copy, utilized the incident in an essay on Physiognomy. His essays did not always have so much connection with their titles. Those on Coaches and on Cripples have very little to do with either subject. But these stray papers, a philosopher's diary, which under 107 heads discuss the most diverse things, and oft discourse most delightfully upon nothing, have been for more than 300 years the companion of scholars, statesmen, authors, and men of the world. His kindly satire, his worldly wisdom, his shrewdness and penetration and good temper; above all, his matchless style, urbane, serene, equable, and witty, have made this book a touchstone of cultivation the world over. Men as different as Emerson, Hazlitt, Amiel and Stevenson have been among its lovers. It is one of the chief treasuries of wisdom about life; it is, in fact, an old classic, inexhaustible in interest.

Take, for instance, his thoughts on Education, which combine in a wonderful way what Solon thought 600 years before Christ, and what Herbert Spencer thought 1900 years after Christ. The gist of Montaigne's educational ideas is in this passage:

> It seems to me that the first teaching with which we ought to imbue the child's mind should be that which is to regulate his morals and his feelings; which shall teach him to know himself and to know how to live well and to die well. * * * 'Tis great foolishness to teach our children the knowledge of the stars and the motions of the eighth sphere before we teach them the knowledge of themselves.

Or take his views upon the vanity of pomp and power, in which he echoes Horace and emulates King Seleucus:

> He who foreknew the weight of the scepter, should he find it lying on the ground, would not deign to take it up. This, by reason of the weighty, irksome and painful charges that are incident unto a good king. Truly, it is no small matter to govern others, since so many crosses and difficulties offer themselves, if we will govern ourselves well.

More than 320 years have passed since the first edition of Montaigne was made in French, and it is nearly 300 years since the first English edition was made from Florio's famous translation. Now this racy, sinewy old version, which has much of the charm of Elizabethan prose and still retains its primacy, has been made the basis of a new edition, issued by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., which will commend itself to bibliographers and bibliophiles alike.

In the editorial equipment of this edition, which is limited to 265 numbered copies, no pains have been spared—both text and notes are the product of trained scholarship. There is a bibliography and notes by George B. Ives, who has collated the Temple Florio with the third (1632) edition, and has compared the translation with the French edition of 1595.

As an example of the bookmaker's art, this edition in three folio volumes, two of them now ready, vies with the best products of American or European presses. The type, specially cut, is modeled on a fine early French design, the whole scheme of the book being thus in harmony with the style and period of its contents. Each volume will have a frontispiece portrait cut on wood in the open-line manner of the early French engravers, set in a border re-drawn from one of the beautiful "Books of Hours," designed by Tory.

The frontispiece of the first volume, I believe, is from the portrait by Thomas de Leu. At any rate, de Leu's engraving is the only one that has under it the quatrain which one of Montaigne's biographers has ascribed to Malherbe—probably that poet's earliest effort, except the verses which he addressed to a flea much as Burns later addressed a louse. The quatrain may be thus rendered.

> If you would see the great Montaigne, behold his counterfeit:
> The painter shows his features, he himself has shown his wit.
> The first hath by his art come near to nature's spell; anticipations of the volume to come. If any fault can be found with Prof. Browne's book it is that there is too much erudition for the general reader—but the general reader doesn't care about Pahlavi texts anyway.
> The other, with his pen, doth nature's self excel.

STORIES FROM GREAT POEMS.

"HEROINES OF POETRY." By Constance E. Maud. New York: John Lane. Price, $1.50.

There are countless many who will never read Mallory's "Morte d'Arthur," or Matthew Arnold's "Sohrab and Rustam," or Browning's "Flight of the Duchess." The next best thing for them is Miss Maud's version, as Lamb's Tales are the next best thing after Shakespeare. There is less reason for including heroines like Minnehaha, from Longfellow's "Hiawatha," or Elsa, the Peasant Maid, from his "Golden Legend," poems which every one has read or ought to read. Tennyson's "Princess" and Keats' "Lamia" would also fall into this class, nor so Edwin Arnold's Savitri or William Morris' Maid of the Swan-skin. On the whole, Miss Maud has done her work as well as when she wrote of Wagner's heroes and heroines.

CHRISTIANITY IN MODERN PHASE.

"THE RELIGION OF A MATURE MIND." By George Albert Coe. New York: Fleming H. Revell Company. Price, $1.25.

The growth of science and the diffusion of popular knowledge have made it impossible for religion to appeal successfully to the sense of mystery. The progress of invention has largely taken away man's sense of his puny impotence and dependence upon a higher power. Finally, the growth of popular government has undermined the authority of ancient tradition; men who will not bow to kings have neglected to bow to God. Hence, says Mr. Coe, we need a new religious experience that will fit the human mind now come to its full age and tempted to forget the religious experiences of its past. Mr. Coe believes in "a new type of aggressive Christianity—most uncompromisingly scientific, most rigorously ethical, most radically modern."

ALL SORTS OF VERSE.

"THE SUNSET SONG AND OTHER VERSES." By Elizabeth Akers. Boston: Lee & Shepard. Price, $1.20.

"POEMS OF LIFE AND LOVING." By Harriet Spangler Shelley. New York: F. Tennyson Neely. Price, $1.25.

"UNPOLISHED PEBBLES." By James Martin Shawhan.

"THE STORY OF THE ANDREWS RAID." By Rev. John F. Bair. Lebanon, Pa.: Report Publishing Co.

"ROLLICKING RHYMES." By N. W. Bingham. Boston: Henry A. Dickerman & Co.

Mrs. Akers, whose "Rock Me to Sleep" has been famous for 40 years, is a true poet—not a Sappho or a Vittoria Colonna whose impassioned song will sob and throb through the ages, but a sweet singer of pleasing numbers. Some of the things in this volume might have been written by Elizabeth Barrett or Lucy Larcom, while one real masterpiece, "In London Streets," is as full of passionate pity as Hood's "Bridge of Sighs." Usually she is at her best in short flights of reflective verse such as:

> The moralist esteems it sacred duty
> To bid the world beware
> Of short-lived bliss and evanescent beauty,
> And calls them false as fair.
>
> Yet, wherefore? Since most brief and transitory
> Is all we hold most dear;
> The rose has but one day of perfect glory,
> The thorns last all the year.

A grand-nephew of Percy Bysshe Shelley's settled on the Susquehanna less than a century ago, and now comes one of his descendants with a volume of verse. I wonder what Shelley would say to this:

> A few days more,
> Then all is o'er,
> For part must we;
> To future then I lean;
> Ah, severed then will be the tie,
> We never more need say good-bye,
> Once I have left thee,
> Sweet sixteen!

The verses of James Martin Shawhan—a former Pittsburgher, I believe—make no pretense at soaring, but have some good philosophy tucked away in homely lines like these:

> So in times o' tears an' troubles, jest look up an' smile,
> You will understand the meanin' in th' afterwhile.

The Rev. Mr. Bair tells the story of the Andrews raid in verse—21 men penetrating to the heart of the Confederacy to capture a locomotive and three cars. It was one of the most daring deeds of the Civil War, but does not lend itself well to treatment in verse, as a single extract will show:

> In a low whisper some one asked
> "What can the matter be?"
> Said he, "We are all to be hanged
> And that immediately."

The "Rollicking Rhymes" of N. W. Bingham are a nonsense alphabet with pictures, quite clever—but the idea was anticipated by Miss Carolyn Wells in the Youth's Companion some time ago, and rather more cleverly.

Norris's Last Novel.

WHAT Zola did in "L'Argent," Frank Norris has attempted in "The Pit." The fever of speculation, the mad thirst for gold, the whole drama of the market-place with its tragedy at the end, is depicted on the mighty canvas of this modern prose epic.

Norris had planned a trilogy, "The Octopus" told the story of the wheat as it grows in the far west, and of railroad greed with track-tentacles of steel grasping the golden grain. "The Pit" tells the story of a gigantic wheat deal in Chicago, where a speculator tries to corner the world's grain supply, building a money wall between hunger and bread. "The Wolf"—which will never be written—was to show the famine abroad as a result of the corner manipulated in La Salle street.

Although each of the stories is independent and in itself complete, Norris had the idea of the trilogy ever before him. It is discernible in the symbolism which, as in Zola and D'Annunzio, runs through his writings. The most striking example in this trilogy is furnished by the fate that overtook S. Behrman and Curtis Jadwin. The usurer of the "Octopus" was smothered in a grain chute, the wheat pouring upon him like an avalanche of yellow death. Can we doubt that as Frank Norris wrote of Behrman's end he already saw Jadwin enmeshed in a like doom, at bay in the wheat pit of Chicago, with triumphant bears tearing at his throat, and the resistless torrent of the summer wheat pouring upon him from all sides, "with a thunder as of the grind and crash of chaotic worlds, bursting through the Pit and racing past him, on and on to the eastward and to the hungry nations"?

As Behrman's fate foreshadowed the catastrophe of "The Pit," so we already hear in this novel the snarl and howl of the wolf across the seas, where starvation stalks over cropless fields and famine stares in dull despair. Perhaps it is as well that "The Wolf" will never be written. It would have been a terrible book, like Zola's "Germinal" or Hauptmann's "Weavers," the dregs of misery, the climax of horror.

After reading "The Pit" the most verdant of the lambs will have a clear insight into the workings of the stock exchange. But the story also affords an insight into that far more incomprehensible thing, the heart of woman. Laura Jadwin and her sister Page are well-drawn figures. How the broker and his wife grew apart during the years, how they were brought together again by financial calamity, is depicted with a psychological fidelity worthy of the brush, or scalpel, of Paul Bourget.

The book has a brutal virility that justifies the ambitious title of epic. Homer was brutal and virile. Read his descriptions of wounds given in battle. There is realism. Norris shows the Homeric sincerity and singleness in "The Pit," which is a far stronger work than "The Octopus," concentrated where that book was diffuse, direct where it was wandering. "The Octopus" was a much bulkier book, yet not as bulky as its original mss. I know from one who saw that original draft how rigorously Norris pruned his own exuberances. Why, some of the sheep in the flock mangled and scattered by the railroad train had been followed up by him for 20 miles.

He is gone now, before his art had seen its full flower and fruitage, but even in their partial unfolding of his genius the six books he has left behind him rank higher than the finished output of mediocre men. They are "Moran of the Lady Letty," an idyll of the sea; "McTeague," a gruesome portrayal of the greed for gold; "Blix," a charming little love story; "A Man's Woman," an analytical novel with a background of polar exploration; and finally, "The Octopus" and "The Pit." The reader sated with conventional novels of flabby style may yet turn to these books with vertebrae, parts and passions.

A NOVEL REVOLUTIONARY TALE.

"FOR A MAIDEN BRAVE." By Chauncey C. Hotchkiss. New York: D. Appleton & Co. Pittsburgh: J. R. Weldin & Co. Price $1.50.

The revolutionary romance with its hair-breadth escapes and swelling heroics is still with us, but, let us be thankful for small mercies, here is one that doesn't introduce Gen. Washington. John Chester, the hero, isn't even a private in the Colonial Army, having fallen into a ditch and broken his leg before he had a chance. But he displays offensive partisanship in an attempt to capture a Tory, and presently finds himself in the midst of such perils as always beset the heroes of revolutionary romance. Incidentally he meets a beautiful young girl who, with equal facility can whip a pistol from the folds of her skirt or two bags of gold from an adjoining room, and whom by these signs we know to be the heroine. After they have faced the pre-ordained allotment of joint perils by land and sea they get their pre-ordained allotment of joint happiness.

There is no amateurish touch in the telling of the story, nor any overdone eruptions of patriotic red fire. These are negative virtues, but they are so rare in books of this kind that over them one almost forgets the really stirring qualities of the tale.

"THE PIT." By Frank Norris. New York: Doubleday, Page & Co. Pittsburgh: J. R. Weldin & Co. Price, $1.50.

A MIGHTY MONARCH INDEED!

"CROESUS AND IONE." By Charlotte Elisabeth Wells. New York: The Riggs Publishing Company.

Miss Wells has a ready invention, but her dramatic technique is rather naive and her blank verse mechanical. "Why, then, but what is this?" suffices to introduce the messenger and the general of the Lydian army, returning to bring Croesus the oracle that leads him into disastrous war with Persia. The lines have all their feet, but sadly lack wings, as—

> My gracious queen, I come to offer thanks.

But the drama deserves special mention if only for the original way in which Croesus slays his beloved, when the jealous queen has led him to believe that Ione betrayed him to Cyrus. Here are the stage directions:

> He exerts great strength and crushes her in his tightened arms. She raises her eyes in one last anguished look and then her head falls back.

Croesus must have been not only the richest, but also the strongest man on earth if he could hug his sweetheart to death.

A MODERN MERRY MONARCH.

"THE KING OF UNADILLA." By Howard R. Gantz. New York: J. S. Ogilvie Publishing Company. Price, 50 cents.

The king of Unadilla is a slangy monarch whose adventures will provoke much merriment. Whether he dons the gloves and drubs his councilors, who dare not hit back, but hire a pug that makes the king decide to drop boxing for ping-pong, or whether he comes home late at night and deludes his waiting spouse by phonographic hot air in lieu of his own unsteady vocal performances, the king of Unadilla is a trump card of the humorous deck.

ZEND-AVESTA TO SHAH-NAMAH.

"A LITERARY HISTORY OF PERSIA, FROM THE EARLIEST TIMES UNTIL FIRDAUSI." By Edward G. Browne. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. Price, $4.

From Zoroaster's holy book to Firdausi's great epic, Professor Browne traces the intellectual history of the Persians through 3,000 years. It is an erudite work, such as the Cantabrigian scholar was qualified to write, and while the ancient literature is less interesting to most readers than the later Persian poetry of Hafiz, Omar and Saadi, it is gratifying to learn that Prof. Browne is at work upon this second volume. The old Parsee legends which lived through the Parthian sway, and the literature of the Sassanide period which survived the Mohammedan conquest, are discussed in masterly manner, considering the fragmentary remains of those eras. The revival of Persian letters under the Caliphate and down to the writing of the Book of Kings is pictured in a way that leads to pleasant

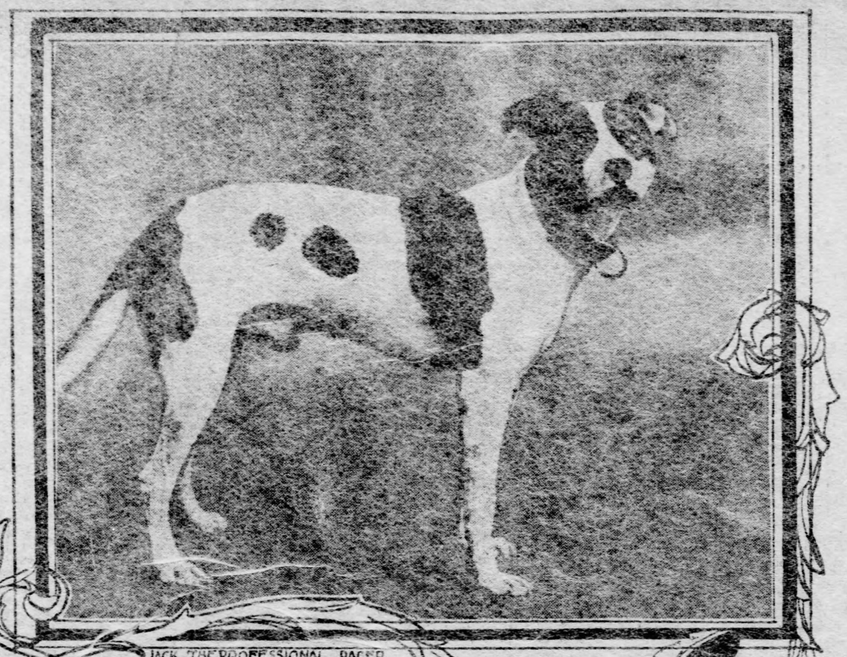
CANINES WITH ALMOST HUMAN INTELLIGENCE



JACK, THE PROFESSIONAL PACER. A REMARKABLE PHOTOGRAPH TURN IT AS YOU WILL THE DOG IS LOOKING AT YOU

BINGO, MANSFIELD, O., PURCHASER AND FINANCIER.

BRIGHT AND FROLIC
THE MORRISTOWN, N.J.
CANINES WHICH SHOWED ALMOST HUMAN AFFECTION
FOR EACH OTHER.

THIS DOG OWNED BY DR. J. E. TROMBLEY SAVED LORAIN, OHIO'S LARGEST BUSINESS BLOCK FROM BURNING BY PAWING ON HIS DOOR AND THUS AWAKENING HIM JUST IN TIME.

By W. FRANK M'CLURE.

MANSFIELD, O., Feb. 7.—The intelligent dog continues to work his way into public favor and recognition. Even those who do not own a dog seldom pass over an account of a noble deed, a mark of intellect, or a bit of careful discrimination of sagacity on the part of a canine, and the American press is giving increased prominence to these stories of human interest. Even from across the ocean depths come examples of doggish intelligence and usefulness which are treasured by all who can appreciate them as among the most entertaining items of current history. The methods by which notable dogs have gained recognition are as varied as are the sizes and colors of the animals themselves.

Bingo, or "Bing," as he is called for short, is one of the most remarkable and interesting dogs that ever breathed the breath of canine life. He is owned by L. N. Loiselle of Mansfield. This dog can best be described as a financier, for he knows the difference between coins of different denominations and shows an unmistakable preference for dollars. He has been known to sit for an hour at a time holding a dollar between his teeth. When a penny, a nickel or a dime are laid on the floor before him he will pick up in each instance the one his master calls for.

As Bingo's owner is the proprietor of a bakery, the dog has naturally developed a fondness for cake. Of all the kinds of cake in the bakery Bingo's favorite is lady fingers. When he becomes hungry for a lady finger he goes direct to his master's desk and makes a very polite little bark, whereupon he receives a penny. Next Bingo goes to one of the clerks and barks again. When the clerk gives him the desired lady finger then the dog will pay for it with his penny, but not before. Returning to his master he places the lady finger in his hand. This Mr. Loiselle understands as an invitation to break the cake in bits, for Bingo much prefers it a little at a time from his master's hand. Mr. Loiselle places a morsel on the dog's nose, at the same time telling him not to touch it until he counts 10. He will then count "one, two, three," and so on up to 10, then skipping "10" will count above it, but "Bing" will not touch the morsel until the word "ten" is pronounced. Any other number may be given Bingo to start out with in place of "10." It will make no difference with the result.

Everybody in Mansfield is acquainted with Bingo. Among those who know and admire him most is a dealer in supplies for horsemen. Whenever the dog comes to see this man he combs Bingo's back with a curry comb much to the animal's delight. One day Bingo went to the store and did not find the proprietor in. He accordingly helped himself to the desired curry comb and carried it home, and going to his master looked up at him with an expression on his face which said plainly: "The man who combs my back is not in, you do it."

A remarkable example of an animal's devotion to his old home was demonstrated by a spaniel at Columbus, O., not long ago. This dog, which went by the name of Rover, was owned by Mrs. Eliza King of Grove street. About two years ago the dog was sent to a new home in Chicago. Although kindly treated, his thoughts, if such they may be called, were centered upon his former home in Columbus, and so one day after a years' residence in the windy city he started on a long journey back to the scenes of his puppyhood. Diligent efforts were made by his owner in Chicago to find him, but all to no avail. But a year later this wise and courageous canine walked into the yard of Mrs. King in Columbus. He was so worn out and haggered by his trip of more than 500 miles that it was necessary for him to establish his identity, and this he did by performing some of the tricks which he had been taught so long before. After having been fed and cared for, in a reasonably short time his haggard appearance began to wear away and he has again assumed a look of contentment after having added his pittance to the long list of heroic and intelligent doings of his kind.

As Rover demonstrated the love of a dog for his home, so Bright and Frolic exemplified the love of one dog for another. Bright and Frolic were owned by A. H. Vernam, a banker of Morristown, N. J. When some time ago Mr. Vernam, with his family, went to Europe on an extended trip, the two dogs were sent to F. B. Vernam, a brother of the banker, at Lorain, O., to remain until their return. When the dogs, which are so splendidly portrayed in the photograph, arrived in Lorain they seemed to feel lost in their new surroundings. Together they started out in a sorrowful sort of way to explore the city, trotting side by side. They had been taught to drive together, and so perfectly were they trained and so much did they think of each other that, when out together, they always ran or walked side by side, whether harnessed or not. Night fell on the first day of their sojourn in Lorain, but the dogs did not return. Mr. Vernam became worried for their safety, but searched for them without success. During the evening Bright came back of his own accord, but unaccountably Frolic was not by his side. The search was continued for Frolic, but availed not until Bright, in response to his pleadings, was allowed to step out upon the porch. Once outside the door he gave two shrill barks and then sat down to wait. Within five minutes Frolic was by his side.

But the lives of these two dogs in their fondness for each other were not to be spared and it was in the death of one that the other displayed the genuineness of his devotion. Both dogs slept in canopied baskets and each was covered each night by a little white quilt at an appointed bed time hour. One's basket was upon one of the stair landings and the other's upon the landing just above. Bright became ill and for a few days was scarcely able to leave his basket. Frolic awaking early would go to Bright's basket and wait for him to arise. After Bright had been ill a few days one morning Frolic was seen approaching his mate's basket, when suddenly he stopped as if prevented from advancing further by some barrier. He was not yet within two feet of Bright's basket. Frolic trembled like a leaf as he gazed upon his companion. Finally, without approaching another step he returned to his basket. Bright was dead. Frolic refused to leave his basket that day nor would he touch a bite of food. It was many days after Bright had been buried before Frolic became at all like himself again.

Mrs. Sarah K. Bolton, the noted author, has told me some very interesting things about the intelligence of a 175-pound St. Bernard owned by her. Bernie was the dog's name. How well she could understand the speech of a person may be realized when I relate that Mr. and Mrs. Bolton often spelled out words in the dog's presence, instead of pronouncing them, in order that she would not understand them. Bernie always slept with her head on a pillow. So devoted was this dog to the care of a kitten which Mrs. Bolton owned that a strong attachment sprung up between them and, strange to say, it was only a few days after the dog died until the cat also died, apparently heart-broken. The intelligence of Mrs. Bolton's pets have undoubtedly been a great inspiration for her pen, which is so much used in the interests of the humane treatment of animals.

Jack, who was owned by Sam Johnson, a barber of Conneaut, was the only dog I have ever heard of that was a professional pacer. Mr. Johnson is fond of athletic sports and has engaged in numerous professional running contests. In his practicing his dog would pace him always waiting for the proper signal before he started and always winning in 100 yards. Although Jack paid no attention to strangers unless ordered to do so, still he never failed to obey his master. One day William Boyd of Woodstock, Canada, came to Conneaut. He too was interested in practicing for a running match. Mr. Johnson at that hour was busy and could not go to the track, but he promised Mr. Boyd a runner that would practice with him. He accordingly at the appointed hour sent Jack. The dog performed his task faithfully and much to the delight of the visitor.

WORLD'S CHAMPION LIFE-SAVER HAS RESCUED 352 FROM DEATH

Extraordinary Record of Capt. Hans Doxrud Has Brought Him Many Honors.

By W. B. TRITES.

(Special Correspondence Sunday Gazette.)

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 7.—In Queenstown harbor, on a moonlight night, a boy leaned over a ship's rail whistling. He was 14 years old, sturdy and blonde, a Norse out of Bergen, and had you spoken in English to him he would have said he did not understand.

In the profound silence, a voice singing made itself manifest to this boy—a drunken voice, singing raucously. Then, black in the pale moonlight, the figure of a man appeared. He zigzagged along the deck, he ended his song with a whoop, he tumbled overboard. The boy threw a rope to him.

But the man, because he was so drunk, did not see the rope, and the cries, the objurgations and the commands of the Bergen boy he did not understand, because they were in a foreign tongue. He was about to drown.

With alacrity the boy made fast the line to the mail, tied it about his breast beneath his armpits, and leaped down into the sea. He reached the drowning man, he gripped him by the collar, and he held his head above the surface until, at last, help came. This boy was Hans Didrik Doxrud.

He is Capt. Hans Didrik Doxrud now, the captain of the Kroenland. The ship that after 35 years of seafaring he has come to command is the biggest and most sumptuous of the American line's steamers, and the record in life-saving that after 35 years he has built up for himself is a record unexampled. For Hans Doxrud has rescued, since the night in Queenstown harbor, no less than 352 men and women from drowning. There follows a table of his achievements:

A Noble Record.

Date.	Ship.	Lives.
1878—	Vascallo	19
1878—	Ida	6
1881—	Norwegian fishing boat	6
1886—	Charles E. Paigle	8
1886—	Don Juan	8
1892—	King Oscar II	14
1896—	Ocean	218
1897—	Theodore Dean	8
1897—	Willie L. Maxwell	5
1898—	Ida Maude	8
1902—	Pretoria	49

The man's bravery, naturally, has brought him many rewards. Among them are a gold watch from the dead President McKinley, a pair of binoculars from the British government, a gold medal from the Life Saving Benevolent Association of New York, a pair of binoculars from the Canadian government, a gold watch from the Quebec Steamship Company, a medal of gold and red enamel from the government of Belgium, and a gold medal from King Oscar II. of Norway.

Capt. Hans Didrik Doxrud.

Capt. Doxrud is now 48 years old, of the middle stature, deeply tanned, and exceedingly robust. He lives, when he is at home, in Philadelphia, with his family.

After his juvenile rescue of the drunken sailor at Queenstown, he saved no more lives until 1878. In March of that year, while in command of a Bergen bark, he fell in with, 400 miles off the Brazil coast, an Italian ship, the Vascallo, that had sprung a leak and was plainly sinking. Her captain and crew of 18 men he took off her none too soon, for an hour later she was seen to sink.

Flying the Yellow Jack.

In December of the same year he sighted in mid-ocean a ship that drifted helplessly upon her side. Boarding her, he found her entire crew of eight lying here and there in the delirium of yellow fever.

In March, 1881, while commanding the Plover, Capt. Doxrud lifted six half-frozen men from a capsized fishing boat off the Norwegian coast and landed them at Hshaven, in the Lofoden islands.

He was second officer of the Belgenland in 1886. On a stormy autumn afternoon a foundering coaster hove in sight, and he volunteered to command the boat that was to put off to her aid. The wind now blew terribly, the sea was a white and hissing turmoil of foam; the spray kept dashing out the lights that gleamed here and there upon that desolation. But, nevertheless, the crew of eight of this sinking American coaster, the Charles E. Paigle, were all saved.

He was chief officer of the Pennland in 1889. A Devon ship, the Don Juan, laden with cod liver oil in barrels and bound for Glasgow, was sighted in a storm. The Don Juan was utterly disabled, and from the Pennland her men could be seen frantically throwing oil upon the waves. Officer Doxrud, with a dozen sailors, went to her aid calmly in a raging sea. Her nine men, leaping into the water, were hauled aboard the lifeboats, which turned and had almost regained the Pennland in safety when a great wave dashed it to pieces against the steamer's towering side. Stunned and bruised, the sailors clung like ants to floating timbers or foundered desperately in the sea; but all, miraculously, were saved in the end.

In 1892, while chief officer of the Noordland, the brave Norseman accomplished his most dangerous feat of heroism. There was sighted off the banks of Newfoundland the King Oscar II., a ship of Norway. She flew a signal of distress and Doxrud put off to her rescue. It was a night in the late autumn. A dreadful storm raged, and, as had happened so many times before, there were great waves, cold and tremendous winds, and black darkness to contend against. At 9 p. m. the lifeboat, leaving the Noordland's side, disappeared in that howling blackness. At 4 a. m. she returned again, with all the King Oscar II.'s crew of 14 men aboard.

In October, 1896, while commanding the Pennland, he saved the Obdam, drifting helplessly. In November, 1897, he rescued eight men of the disabled schooner Willie L. Maxwell. And as he towed the Maxwell he sighted and picked up a small boat containing five half-frozen men of the crew of the Theodore Dean. In 1898 Capt. Doxrod saved in mid-ocean from the disabled Ida Maude her captain and crew of seven.

April of this year witnessed his latest humane deed. The Pretoria, a Canadian passenger steamer, lay in flames outside the Delaware breakwater. Boarding her he took off 49 passengers, while the burning ship herself he escorted to New York harbor.

UNCLE SAM'S NEW PETS.

Uncle Sam's New Pets...

ISLAND POSSESSIONS HAVE ADDED ALL SORTS OF ANIMAL CURIOSITIES TO OUR NATIONAL ZOO.....

Written for The Sunday Gazette by FELIX L. OSWALD.

THE list of Uncle Sam's nephews has increased some 40 per cent in the course of the last 10 years, but its number of species has more than doubled. Luzon alone has added about 300 new breeds of bipeds to our ethnological curiosity shop and at least half a hundred different quadrupeds.

They are not all bargains, these new acquisitions; some of them come rather high at the current rate of expenditure, but on the whole their merits and demerits may be said to balance each other. In the biped department a silver-white pheasant makes amends for the root-colored negritos, and such quadrupeds as the speckled deer are numerous enough to outweigh the 20-foot crocodile, caught in the Laguna del Bruxo last summer.

The budget of four-handed curiosities represents a clear gain. Six years ago the man in star and stripe jeans was the most monkeyless of real estate magnates. In 1887 the very Russians had got ahead of him. After conducting bear dances for a thousand years they collared two species of baboons with a strip of territory on the east coast of Africa. Our little sister republic had trump cards in four-handed game both in Algeria and Cochin China.

But the victory of Manila harbor has remedied all that. Our professors of Darwinism have acquired a home basis of demonstration. A few years ago Connecticut speculators established a street organ factory, and can now accommodate their customers with indigenous dancers. And our assortment of tree-climbing mammals is fairly complete now. In the northern Philippines we own 11 species of daylight monkeys, several four-handed night walkers, or rather night climbers, and one species of baboons. In the southern islands four additional varieties of long-tailed cousins, and possibly one species of true apes.

A Lightning Disappearance Act.

The large tailless tree-dweller, seen here and there in the heart of the Mindanao virgin woods, may be an acrobat of the kind known as Gibbon apes, though their name can hardly have been devised from the physical characteristics of Edward Gibbon, F. R. S. L.

"Get up this instant, sir," said a French lady, when the distinguished foreigner fell at her feet.

"I wish I could, madame," groaned the unsound historian of the Roman empire.

The agility of his oriental namesake transcends that of a French dancing master. With one swing of his superhuman arms he can launch his body into space to a distance of 24 feet, grasp a branch and repeat his aerial voyage with a promptness that enables him to defy pursuit, and vanish almost instantly, if the hunter has not contrived to surprise him on an isolated tree. American enterprise will not endanger his survival in the art of disappearance he could give points to a St. Louis boodle politician.

Porto Rico has enriched our pet market with a rose-colored paroquet and some beautiful goldfinches, one of them with black checkered wings that close and expand with the diversified effects of a kaleidoscope. The sand hills west of San Juan are haunted by tarantulas, which the unreconstructed natives often pit against a still larger bird-spider—probably to compensate the loss of their fighting cocks. Scores of game roosters were confiscated by the agents of our Law and Order societies, but equally sportive spiders can be hidden in a dinner pail and flourished with other symbols of American prosperity.

Birds Smaller Than Butterflies.

Nor would it be easy to enforce the laws against bird-hunting milliners. One species of Porto Rico humming birds weighs only a third of an ounce and could be concealed under the very ribbon-folds of an ornamental bonnet. Even with expanded wings such bits of contraband would be mistaken for small, artificial butterflies.

The Isle of Pines is not an ornithological paradise. The Spaniards used it for a convict colony, and some of their Tracy escaped to the continent, after hiding out in the rock labyrinth of the coast hills. Others still flit about the hill caves, but the same rocks are also cultivated by the flute-voiced quail, and a species of lizard that will get as tame as a pet rat and take titbits from the hands of its protector.

Only on the island of Negros the problem of benevolent assimilation may puzzle our experts. The natives of its Pueblo Sierras are United States citizens now, but resent intimations of that fact with showers of poisoned arrows. They guard the secret of placer mines, and it might be a pleasure to disarm their prejudices if the effects of their arrow poison were not equally hard to eradicate. Moreover, they prefer spring water to spirituous luxuries, and like the Moorish refugees of the Alpuxerras, they may resist the means of salvation for a series of centuries.

A RESIDENCE THOROUGHFARE IN HOSENSACK

HOSENSACK, PA., Feb. 6.—If you are troubled by the economic and social problems of the present: If you want to renew your faith in Triumphant Democracy; if you want to see what common men can do in the face of the greatest obstacles; if you want to believe in the social and economic redemption of the world, then come to Hosensack.

You may wonder why it is worth while for anybody, for a student or a specialist, to spend a day in this little village founded by the Pennsylvania Schwenkfelders years ago. You may notice that there are an unusually large number of good dwellings and few shanties, and that the town is kept clean. If it happens to be on September 21, "Apple Butter day," which is celebrated by the Schwenkfelders, you will have a glorious good time, and, in addition, can have the pleasure of witnessing the making of hundreds of barrels of apple butter. Among the devout members of the sect the occasion is known as "Gedaechtniss Tag," or Memorial Day. Its popular name refers to the most conspicuous feature of the Monday repast that is a regular part of the service, which is strictly a religious festival.

If you happen to be in Hosensack on a certain day in April you will see 300 or 400 German farmers gathered in their annual town meeting, and when their business is finished you will hear their Daniel Webster (one Harry Seipt) stir the farmers with his "Dutch" eloquence.

Many years ago these people settled in Pennsylvania, coming from Europe to escape persecution, and their organization is the only one which sets apart a day each year on which the members meet to give thanks for their release from the religious thraldom of the old world. This is the purpose of their Gedaechtniss Tag, for on September 24, 1734, the first Schwenkfelders, who had landed at Philadelphia two days before, held a thanksgiving service in recognition of their safe arrival.

Origin of the Community.

Ever since their founder, Casper Schwenkfeld von Ossig, a Silesian nobleman of the Sixteenth century, had disagreed with Luther over the nature of the sacraments and, therfore, decided to discontinue both baptism and communion until their purpose should be better understood, his followers have been subjected to ridicule, imprisonment and death under Catholic and Protestant rulers. Finally they emigrated in a body to America in 1734, settling in the Perkiomen valley.

Since then generation after generation of Schwenkfelders have lived in this valley. Their farms, the largest and best in the commonwealth, have been bequeathed from generation to generation, and each succeeding owner has sought to enhance his heritage by keeping in touch with the most modern methods of farming. While sedulously guarding against changing the ancient customs of their faith, the Schwenkfelders never oppose real progress, as some other Pennsylvania German seels have done.

These German people are large growers of corn, wheat, oats, barley, and in addition they raise a large number of cattle. For years they had trouble in selling their stock and grain in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and elsewhere. In making their sales, etc., the "middleman" was their worst enemy, so one day 12 years ago they got together and wrote their declaration of independence, otherwise the articles of incorporation of the Worcester Farmers' union, which is as follows: "Notice is hereby given that the undersigned have formed a corporation for the purpose and subject to conditions as follows:

"First. The name of the incorporation shall be the Worcester Farmers' Union and its principal place of transacting business shall be at Hosensack.

"Second. The general nature of the business to be transacted by this society shall consist in buying and selling and dealing in all kinds of farm and dairy products, cattle, swine, sheep, poultry, dry goods, boots and shoes, groceries, hardware, farm machinery, lumber, coke, brick and building material of all kinds, and in buying and selling all such kinds of property on commission and generally."

This was very easy to say, but the union has been very successful. The first year they transacted a business of $125,000. The record of the last five years is as follows:

1898	128,000
1899	122,000
1900	135,000
1901	138,000

The agent's report shows the line on which they transacted their business, and it is very suggestive.

Financial Success Followed.

The treasurer's report for 1901 shows a net balance of $9,129 22. Such a record would do honor to any board of bank directors. Mr. John Hieber, president of the union, himself would probably be glad if another 12 years show as good a record.

Through their society the farmers can buy merchandise at least 10 per cent cheaper than they could otherwise, while the goods they sell to others bring the highest prices. So successful have they been that today the farmers have their original large warerooms, six churches, an opera house, a seminary, brickyard, 12 stores, several large buildings, lumber yards, a comfortable bank account, and though it is entirely independent, nevertheless a sympathetic farmers' bank.

When they shipped their first load of hogs some one sent a message ahead to the commission men, saying: "These hogs are shipped by a co-operative society. Swipe them." The commission men sold the swine, sent the farmers full returns and also the telegram. In another case, when grain went, a very interesting letter from somebody went to the consignee. Said consignee attended to his own business and that of the farmers, returned the full value of the merchandise and likewise the letter. This discouraged the practice of local people writing letters about the "Schwenkfelders," and their co-operative society. For some time they had a good market for their grain in Buffalo. After a season they were refused a chance to sell there, the reason given by the Buffalo people being that the other dealers whined so much about it.

The "Schwenkfelders" have had many fights, but the main one was with an implement company in Philadelphia, and for a long time they could not buy any of the standard machinery, for the firm in this city and in other cities refused to sell to co-operative societies, and it was not until after a most bitter fight that the farmers won their point. They had hardly got this trouble settled when several furniture firms declined to sell them furniture, from one of which they had contracted for $500 worth of goods. This firm wrote them that they could not ship the goods, because if they did they must pay a fine of 15 per cent, but after learning that the farmers were about to erect a furniture factory of their own the several firms pulled in their horns, and now the co-operative society has no difficulty in purchasing all the material of this kind required.

Do Not Declare Dividends.

The Schwenkfelders co-operative society has been saved from the fate of other similar enterprises by a very simple, shrewd proviso, namely: not to declare dividends, but to pay them as they go along, to have no dues, but to cover all their running expenses and keep their sinking fund in good condition by charging each member three-eighths of a cent commission on each bushel of grain, every shipment of hogs, cattle and fruit, etc. The payment of commission has been a matter of honor that has not often been dishonored.

The "Schwenkfelders" never speculate. Their motto is to sell as quickly as possible, miss now and then large gains, but avoid big losses and be satisfied with their small dividends as they go along. There is no credit, business settlements are made each month. Frequently a farmer has from $300 to $800 due him at his office. They are able in this way to discount their own bills, and by honesty among themselves, small profits, large sales and no losses grow steadily strong. They entered the new year with a reasonable hope of continued prosperity, with one proviso, that they can have in the future just transportation rates.

This raises a very serious question. Andrew Carnegie once said that it was intolerable that one man should have the power, by the stroke of his pen, to charge full rates to suit his will, from Pittsburgh to tidewater. So far these farmers have had reasonably fair dealings with the Pennsylvania railroad. The attempt has been made by interested enemies to induce the railroads to refuse to handle their produce or to exterminate them by discrimination. The Pennsylvania so far has had reasons to deal fairly with the farmers, because it attracts to their line business that would be transported on other roads. A person can easily figure out what may happen when railroad community of interest has gone its full length. Perhaps one can do some thinking over the proposition that the highway of the people may be employed to exterminate the people's economic independence.

Why They Succeeded.

The "Schwenkfelders" have succeeded for two reasons: first, the philosophy there is in that little three-eighths of a cent commission, and, secondly, because they have had good sense to secure reliable men among themselves who had pride in the success of their enterprise and who frequently sacrifice time and money for the common good.

Their president, George Kriebel, might well be called the "father confessor" of the society. No longer a resident of the Schwenkfelders community, he comes an honored guest to the annual meetings. He is heard gladly as he talks of honor, character and integrity. Mr. Kriebel feels that the greatest good of the society has not been the gains and the savings in money, but the gains that have been made in character.

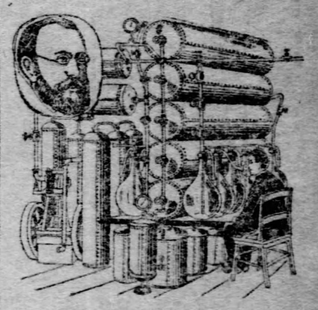
The society has no philosophisms about it. Their ways would be very disgusting to some social theorists, but nevertheless it is interesting to see that they are growing in fraternalism.

The business is transacted by one agent at $1,200 a year; one bookkeeper, $45 a month; two men at $50 a month, with extra help in rush times. They have practical genuine civil service. The first agent was Henry Schultz, now cashier of the Farmers' bank. The society owes much of its success to his financial sagacity. Fresh from the farm, he developed the essential acumen to handle the intricate and untried problems that arose at the inception very quickly. Associated with him from the first was Charles Gerhard as assistant. After eight years Mr. Schultz refused under any terms to remain as agent, for he had worked very hard and desired a change. It was his suggestion that they take the man who had been trained in the office. It was a wise move. Mr. Gerhard for four years now has handled the business very satisfactorily. His own modest estimate of the reason for their success is "a class of good farmers and men and no losses." Such a record suggests limitless possibilitie of the application of community of interet for common people.

A Recommendation.

Horace Greeley wrote an execrable hand. He once dismissed an employe by letter, and afterwards found that the man had used his letter of dismissal as one of recommendation; and the third party, unable to decipher it, believed it to be a recommendation, and took the man into his employ.

WHAT IS THE KOCH LUNG CURE



We are widely known all over America, but still there are many who are not familiar with our methods, and it is these whom we desire to enlighten. The Koch Lung Cure is the greatest institution existing today in the United States for the successful treatment of Asthma, Consumption, Bronchitis and Catarrh. Our institutes at New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore, Washington, Pittsburgh, Buffalo, Cincinnati, Rochester and Altoona are treating more patients and curing more people of respiratory diseases than any other treatment known.

WHY THIS IS SO?

Because we are applying the discovery of the most eminent living medical scientist known to the world. Prof. Robert Koch of Berlin gave to mankind the reason of consumption, namely, the "tuberculois bacilli." This master of medical science also discovered a serum or lymph which destroys the bacilli. All this is a matter of exact history. Thousands whose maladies have been pronounced genuine tubercular pulmonary consumption (phthisis pumonalli) by competent physicians in practice have been perfectly and permanently cured of this dreadful disease by the Koch inhalations the past 10 years. The Koch Inhalations kill the consumptive germ in the lungs as quinine kills the malarial germ in the blood. These inhalations help the lungs first and destroy the bacilli; this helps the whole body. The battle is on—the contending parties are the Koch inhalations and the germ. The effect is steady, Koch inhalations turn the scale. You may or may not feel it at once, you may or may not know what is going on, you may be entirely ignorant of it, but health goes up and the germ goes down.

ETCHINGS BY THE WAY — By Elliott Flower.

Her Experiment.

She decided that she would be a new woman.

"That," they explained, "is to be as much like a man in your methods as you can be."

Well, she was going to try it, anyway.

The next time her father denied her something on which her heart was set she was disposed to cry, but she restrained. Her brother, she knew, would get mad about it. So she got mad. But her anger seemed to be only amusing.

"But a new woman," they explained, "doesn't get angry. She merely argues."

So she sat down to discuss the question, but her father refused to discuss it.

"It is settled," he said.

It was only a small matter anyway, but she wanted to have her own way about it.

She retired and considered the matter deeply. Her feelings were hurt, and she was again tempted to cry, but she determined she would not be weak. She would again resort to reason.

But her father only laughed and refused to listen to reason.

"Don't be foolish," he said. "I am the best judge of this."

That was too much. The tears came and she rushed away. A little later he followed and found her curled up on a settee, weeping.

He smiled and walked away, but presently he came back, to find her still weeping.

"Now, don't be absurd about it," he told her.

Her only reply was a convulsive little sob.

He went to the door and then stopped. She sobbed some more, and he gave an impatient exclamation. Then he came back to her again.

"Oh, well," he said, "if you're going to feel as bad about it as all that, why do as you please."

She dried her tears and kissed him, and after that everything was lovely. She said he was the dearest father in the world, and he said that she was a true woman with all a woman's arts.

Later she told a friend in confidence that she didn't want to be a new woman.

"It doesn't pay," she said, "if you want to have your own way."

Perhaps there is a moral in this.

Time's Changes.

Alas! how fast time flies!
What changes does it make!
Keats's brow denies
What once I'd boldly take.

Some fifteen years ago,
When she was "only four,
I'd like to have you know
I kissed her o'er and o'er.

Sometimes the kiss was free;
Sometimes she'd not comply;
But dimes would e'er for me
This pleasing favor buy.

What makes time change us so?
I saw the maid tonight;
Yet she'd refuse, I know
What once was her delight.

Now dollars would not buy
What dimes have often bought.
Indeed, she'd now decery
An insult in the thought.

Yet now I've older grown,
And favors would elate,
Which I could not, I own,
Before appreciate.

Still Had His Nerve.

The engineer had been many years in the service of the road, and it is a well known fact in railroad circles that in time the majority of engineers lose their nerve. They become too cautious, and as a result they get their trains in late.

This engineer—and this is a true story—had lost his nerve. He had a passenger engine, and twice he had been told that if he could not bring the train in on time he would have to begin hauling freight. That is a pretty hard threat to throw at an engineer, and he meekly promised to do better.

On the occasion of the third warning he asserted that he would bring the train in on time "even if there was a brick house on the track and a barn in addition."

He came into the office after his "run" a day or so later, glanced about the room, looked up at the ceiling, and then asked:

"Seen any of it?"

"Of what?" asked an official.

"Coal," said the engineer.

"Coal!" repeated the official. "Why should we expect to see any coal here?"

"Oh, I guess it hasn't come down yet," answered the engineer carelessly.

"What do you mean?" demanded the official.

"Some one left a loaded coal car on the main track," explained the engineer. "Switch turned too soon or a coupling broke, I guess. Anyway, it was there."

"And you——"

"I PULLED HER WIDE OPEN AND CAME THROUGH."

"Oh, I got in on time. I'm not like a man who has lost his nerve—not by a good deal."

"But the car! How did you get around—"

"I didn't get around. I pulled her wide open and came through. There's about half a ton of that coal on the top of the rear coach, and I was expecting to find the rest of it here. The last I saw of it it was high and scattering."

"Great Scott!"

"And say!"

"Well?"

"The smokestack of the engine is gone, there's no pilot left, and the windows of the cab are busted. But, of course, I was acting under orders and I got in on time. And say, again!"

"Well?"

"Just put it down on your books somewhere that an engineer who hasn't lost his nerve, but is tired of keeping it, resigned from the service of the road today and is going to look for a job on a farm."

Story Carnegie Told Phipps.

Henry Phipps, who recently gave $1,500,000 to found a hospital for the treatment and study of tuberculosis in Philadelphia, is now in India, whither he went to attend the coronation durbar. At a dinner in New York previous to his departure Mr. Phipps said:

"I am going to tell you a story that Mr. Carnegie told to me. It is a story illustrative of the connubial felicity so prevalent in Scotland, and I am sure you will enjoy it.

"Once, at a party, there was a crusty old Scot seated at a whist table, playing passionately, and his partner was a young woman, the daughter of a neighboring laird. You are to imagine this young woman's surprise, in the heart of the game, when the old fellow threw down his cards and bawled at her:

"'What kind of a game are ye playin', ye darned auld ——'

"And then, recollecting himself, he bowed and said humbly to the outraged girl:

"'Your pardon's begged, madam. I took ye, in the excitement, for my ain wife.'"

Two Views of the Same Question.

Bishop Potter, in order to point a lesson in humility, sometimes tells a story of a young clergyman whose first appointment was to an out-of-the-way and poor parish.

On his first Sunday in this new station, the young man, as he looked over his wretchedly-clad and ignorant congregation, could not help saying to himself, with a groan:

"Dear me, what a dreadful thing it would be if I should have to stay here any great length of time."

At the end of the sermon a deacon made a prayer. To the young man's horror, one part of the prayer was a benevolent hope that "this ignorant, inexperienced, barren pastor that had lately come to the parish might improve, and grow learned and fruitful in good works, so that he would come to merit being kept on there for awhile."

The Stovepipe Was Too Hot.

At the recent anniversary dinner of the Clover club of Philadelphia, Dr. Edward Bedloe said:

"One winter night I attended a revival service that some colored friends of mine were holding in a little church in South street. The church was crowded. The exhorting and the singing were spirited. But all of a sudden the stove-pipe fell, and, being hot, it began to burn a hole in the carpet.

"Brother Smith hastened to the pipe, but hesitated about picking it up.

"The preacher from the platform egged him on. 'Brudder Smith, what yo' afraid of?' he exclaimed. 'Pick up dat pipe, Brudder Smith. Doan' be afraid. De Lord won't let it burn yo'.'

"The timid brother accordingly took heart. He believed the preacher, and lifted the pipe with his bare hands. But he dropped it again immediately.

"'De debil he won't!' he was heard to mutter, as he hastened out of the church to get some salve for his burn."

Easily Demonstrated.

Upon an arbor seat she sat,
And he sat very near her.
A pretty face beneath her hat—
To him naught e'er was dearer.
What wonder then he forward leaned,
And quietly did kiss her?
Had he this favor left unclaimed,
He would have been remiss, sir.

"WHY, GEORGE, HOW COULD YOU DO IT?"

She rose and quickly left his side,
Intent to make him rue it.
And most indignantly she cried:
"Why, George, how could you do it?"
'Twas easy, he said, and then he did
Another kiss implant, sir.
Where captivating dimples hid—
And thus she had her answer.

The Dub Zebra Who Landed

ONCE upon a Time there was a worthy young Zebra who was much enamoured of a Beauteous young Tigress, and greatly desired to hitch up with her for a running mate for Life.

Unfortunately, however, the Zebra was one of those misfit Romeos on whom Romance sits like a Hired Dress Suit. His heart was all right, but he put up a Bum front. Excess of Emotion made his Eyes Watery, and so great was his Devotion that he fell over his Kicks when he approached his Divinity and trod upon her Corns. He was also a Dub with a female, but he had staying Powers, and he followed her about like a Bill Collector trying to make good on a bad Claim.

Whenever she appeared in Public he was hot on her Trail, and as soon as he could separate her from the herd he dragged her into a corner, and put up the same old song and dance until she knew it by heart.

"Adored one," he would say, as he tried to swallow his Palate, "be mine, for you have made Mince Meat of my Affections, and without you my Life is Damaged Goods."

"Back to the Alfalfa," she would cry, handing him the Icy Mitt, "for you do not come up to my Specifications of a Husband, and whenever I trade off My Liberty for the Privilege of being Somebody's Cook there will have to be a Better Looking Prize Package than you offered as an Inducement."

These words greatly discouraged the Zebra, and he went away with a melancholy air.

"Ha," said the Tigress to herself, "that polishes him off to a finish, and while I do not like to Shovel Dirt to one who really Loves me, I cannot stand for that Chromo, and the sooner I turn it to the Wall for Keeps the better."

Now, an Ordinary Lover would have been ruled off the Track for good at this Cruel Speech, and would have changed his name and entered on another Track, but the next morning the Zebra was again at the Post ready to butt into the race once more.

"Angel Bird," he cried, falling upon his knees and clutching at his Solar Plexus, "be mine. Without you my Life is a car that has slipped its Trolley, a Welsh Rabbit without Tabasco, a Poached Egg without a Raft, a Picnic without the Beer. Illuminate the darkness of my Existence with your Love."

"Not on your life. Nit. Not me," replied the Tigress, with scorn. "If you want the Electric Current turned on your Pathway you must get somebody else to work the Switch, for it is not in my Line. Without doubt you are a Model of all the Virtues, and you have a Sizeable Roll that I should enjoy helping you spradle around, but you are not Exciting, and I opine that a Standing Engagement of Quiet Evenings at home with you would reconcile me to an Early Death."

"Now," said the Tigress to herself as he disappeared with the air of one who has gotten it in the Neck, "I apprehend that that Jolt will put him out of business, and that I shall be left to Peace. It grouches me to have to wield the Hammer on such a Noble and Faithful Creature, but his love-making has Soured on my Taste and I have had about Enough of It."

To her surprise, however, the next morning when she opened her Door the Zebra was camping on the front Stoop.

"It's you for the Cop this Time sure," cried the Tigress, "for I have warned you off of the Premises before and have posted the Ground for four Blocks around."

"Alas," replied the Zebra, "Love for you has got me Woozy, and I cannot Stay away. Do not drive me from your Presence, for I ask only to be allowed to gaze forever at your Beauteous Phiz, and listen to you when you Spiel."

"Begone," exclaimed the Tigress, as she gave him the Glassy Glare, "for I am Tired of hearing you blow off Hot Air, and while you may be all Right, you don't suit me. Cut it out. Forget it."

Instead of doing this the Zebra continued to hang around with his little old Proposition always on Tap. Whenever there was anything Doing he was always there with his tale of Love, with his Sad, Sweet, Patient, Waiting Smile, until the Thing begun to get on the Tigress' Nerves. Finally, when she felt that it was about to give her the Gotemagains, she went to a Wise Old Lioness, and thus addressed her:

"I am in Sore Trouble," she said, "for I am being persecuted by a Creature who Sticks to my Skirts like Broadway Mud, and that I cannot brush off. As soon as I poke my Nose out of my Door he bobs up like he had an Option on my Time. He comes to my House to call and stays until we have to Throw him out, and I am dead Tired of it all, and desire you to give me some Infallible Remedy for Ridding myself of his Society."

"Marry him," quote the Lioness, "and you will never be bothered with his company again. He will sit up and Read the paper all the time he is at home, and the Minute Dinner is over he will make a break for the Club. No Wife ever has reason to complain that she gets too much of her Husband's society, for while you cannot drive a Masculine Creature away from your house before you Marry him, you cannot inveigle him in after you do until 3 a. m."

Being a sensible Creature, the young Tigress took this advice and married the Zebra and spent the balance of her Life trying to devise methods of keeping him at home.

That Strange Animal, The Cook

THE COOK—We now approach the study of the animal most feared by human beings. It is called The Cook, and not only does it yearly slay its thousands of victims, but is possessed of a temper so ferocious and uncertain that even the boldest approach it with fear and apprehension.

The Cook is indigenous to the fauna of every country, but although large numbers of intelligent and philanthropic people devote their lives to trying to tame it, only in rare and isolated cases has it been possible to domesticate one. It may be apparently satisfied and happy, and the fortunate owner begins to put on airs and brag about having secured a treasure, when suddenly some cold morning at breakfast time it is found to be missing, having escaped in the night.

Another curious circumstance to be noted in this connection is that although Cooks are as plentiful everywhere as Jack rabbits on a Western prairie, the species has become so degenerate that it is almost impossible to secure even a fairly good specimen, while a perfect one would be worth its weight in gold in any museum.

Tradition has it that there was a time when Cooks who were kind and gentle and had been taught a number of domestic tricks, such as how to season things and make bread, were to be found everywhere, and there are even travellers who profess to have seen one or more of these rare animals, but it has been found impossible to verify these statements and they are not generally believed.

The terror in which men stand of the Cook has, unfortunately, prevented naturalists from making the study of the subject that it demands, but owing to the migratory instinct which causes it to have a deadly animosity to staying in one place more than a few months at a time, the ingenuity it displays in ruining good food, the malignant wastefulness by which it attempts to reduce its owner to bankruptcy, the dyspepsia-inducing concoctions it turns out, and yet the wild panic its departure causes, scientists have placed the Cook in a class all by itself, called Genus Miserable Goorstayus. This Latin phrase signifies that we are up against it either way, and while we may be wretched with a Cook, we are miserable without one.

In looks the Cook is a most formidable creature, although it differs greatly in different localities. In the South it is black. In the North it is generally Swede, or Dutch, but whichever one you choose and take home for a household pet, you will wish you had taken the other.

The habits of the Cook are so curious and inexplicable as to baffle human understanding, for although deathless fame and the gratitude of the entire race awaits the man or woman who first finds out some way to keep a Cook, no one has ever been able to discover any method of appealing to this strange creature.

The expedient of calling it "help" and treating it as a member of the family has been tried in vain, and some devoted masculine students, in the ardor of their investigations, have been experimented with kissing and carressing the Cook when it was young and comely, but even this has not been universally successful. Inasmuch as the Cook is not amenable to kindness, some scientists have suggested that perhaps rough treatment and harsh words might avail in taming it, but nobody has yet been found sufficiently foolhardy to sass the Cook.

So far as can be ascertained the Cook has two insatiable passions in life. One is in giving warning—a mysterious performance which consists in its appearing before its mistress with its bonnet and shawl on, and hay on its horns, and uttering various angry and disjointed cries. The other is a sacred joy it feels in smashing fine china and glass. The mere sound of shivering Sevres and cut glass fills the Cook with such unholy joy that it gives it the appearance of having been on a jag.

The chief peculiarity of the Cook is the number of relatives it possess, most of them being on the police force. Family affection seems to also be developed in this animal to an almost abnormal extent, for it thinks nothing of leaving dinner burning on the stove to go to attend the funeral of its cousin's cousin's stepchild.

The most characteristic of the Cook is its cruelty. As has been said, it slays every year more people than war, railroad wrecks and pestilence combined, but it does not kill swiftly. Like the cat it plays with its victim before killing him; poisoning him by slow degrees with doughnuts, pies, fried steak, etc. These induce dyspepsia and the poor creature dies in great agony.

Although the Cook is the least domestic animal in the world, so greatly is it esteemed as a household pet that the majority of well-to-do women spend their lives in the pursuit of one. The chase is an exciting and interesting one, and the method of capturing a Cook is worth noting. Cooks herd in lairs called Employment Agencies, to which the women repair armed with their pocketbooks and certificates of character from previous Cooks. Here, by means of an artfully set trap, such as denying the number of their children, saying they never have company, and allow followers, the woman frequently succeeds in cajoling one to go home with her, but she never succeeds in keeping it long. This makes the pursuit of the Cook a perennial pastime.

No other country in the world has such ferocious and unmanageable Cooks as America. Indeed, so fearsome are they that the majority of the inhabitants have fled from the depredations and taken refuge in hotels and boarding houses.

The Crime of Matrimony

By DOROTHY DIX.

THE popular attitude of looking upon woman as a freak in creation—a kind of missing link between an angel and a sawdust doll—instead of just a plain human being, complicates a great many questions that would be perfectly simple if she were only let in on the ground floor of life on an equal footing with man and with the same right to think for herself and make a living that he has.

A case in point is the recent enlightened and liberal decision of the board of education that marriage is high treason when committed by a schoolma'am, and in consequence thereof she must suffer official decapitation. Fortunately, no such cruel fate awaits the schoolmasher when she marries, and so we are left with the puzzling conundrum to answer of why matrimony is a crime in a woman and a virtue in a man, since they have got to marry each other.

The argument that a woman should be debarred from teaching because she has a husband to support her is only worth considering if the public school system is an eleemosynary institution, intended for the relief of the lame, the halt and the blind, and not for imparting information to the young. In that case a woman's physical needs, and not her intellectual ability should constitute her qualification for a place as teacher, and a doctor's certificate of total disability be worth more to her than a diploma from Vassar.

But even viewing the matter from the cheerful and humanitarian point of view of the school fund being a charity fund, marriage should no more cut a woman off from participating in it than a man, for unhappily every woman who acquires a husband does not acquire a support. Indeed, it not infrequently happens that after marriage she has twice the need to work that she did before, for a drunken and no-account husband is one of the most expensive luxuries in which a woman can indulge. If poverty and need, instead of ability, constitute her fitness for a place to teach in the public schools, the woman with a good-for-nothing husband should head the salary lists and hold down the preferred places, for there can be no question about her necessities.

On the other hand, no one need worry about the number of women with good, kind, generous husbands crowding out the spinsters and occupying all the teachers' desks. Teaching the young idea how to shoot is about the most wearying, exasperating, nerve-wrecking occupation on earth, and precious few women who do not need the money they can earn by it are clamoring to be teachers. When a woman who does not need the money teaches through sheer love and enthusiasm in imparting knowledge to youth, let no man dare to stop her, whether she is married or single, for she is called of God and gives the world that which no money can pay for.

As a plain matter of fact, and shorn of all sex considerations, there was never a more bitter injustice perpetrated than the arbitrary ruling that no married woman shall teach in a public school. The woman will not want to teach unless she needs the money she can earn in the profession for which she has spent years in preparing herself, and if she does need it, it is needlessly cruel to shut in her face the only way she has of making a living.

Unquestionably it dooms many women to lonely lives, for it forces them to decide between a job and a husband, and prudence whispers to them in many cases that it is better to swing onto the good thing you have than to trust yourself to the support that you know not of. No man teacher is asked to give up his situation when he marries, and there is no valid reason why the woman teacher who wishes to marry a poor man and eke out his scanty earnings with her salary shouldn't be allowed to do it. Nor is it any discredit to the man thus to be helped financially as well as spiritually by his wife. Many a poor man has a great idea teeming in his brain that he only needs such assistance to get before the world.

Other things being equal, too, the married woman and the mother is a better teacher than the spinster. There is no such broom as matrimony for sweeping the cobwebs out of a woman's brain, and making her see life broader, fairer and juster. Nearly all of the cranks and extremists are old maids, who set up their own little rigid, hide-bound standards and never see beyond them.

Motherhood is in itself a liberal education, and it gives a divine understanding of child nature that no women who has not had children can ever hope to reach. The little stumbling speech, the groping thought, the inarticulate hopes and fears and ambitions are only comprehended in their entirety by the woman who has herself been to school at a child's knee. The balance of us, no matter how well meaning we are, no matter how much scientifically and theoretically we may know about childhood, are mere bunglers.

It is the greatest possible misfortune that the calling of the teacher, which should be as sacred as the priesthood, should be a mere gainful occupation, entered into with no more thought of one's having a mission for it than for being a grocery clerk, but any ruling that will exclude from it mature women—married women—and give their places to young girls or old maids will be a calamity.

It is ridiculous, anyhow, to turn a woman out of her profession just because she marries, and the board of education ought to be ashamed of itself for putting a premium on spinsterhood when there are so many men needing good, intelligent wives, like schoolma'ams make. So there, now!

FANCY SKATING GONE

FIGURE and fancy skating seems to have gone out of fashion altogether, and one seldom sees a skater on lake, pond, or in a rink describing curves, grapevines, twists or any pretty figure. Everybody seems bent on skating in as straight a line as the ice will allow. Probably if the lake were to freeze there would be some one who would see how many miles he could skate in a straight line.

Some years ago fancy skating was the rage. There were no rinks in those days where ice was made, and all the skating was done out of doors, and every one tried to cut figures. No one was content merely to be able to skate. That was simple work, but to excel in curves and twists was something worth accomplishing.

There was a regular progression of figures which the skater had to learn, and these tricks gradually became more and more difficult. The simple inside and outside curves were first, and these were made forward and backward. Circles came next and then figures 8s, 3s and various other curves that the skater might attempt. Grapevines and twists followed, and he who could not make a grapevine was a poor skater, indeed.

No one took any notice of a figure skater unless he was an expert, because nearly every one on the ice was trying in some way or other to do something fancy. Nowadays if a skater starts in to make figures he will soon be the center of attraction. Each year championship competitions are held for figure skating, but these championships have fallen off in the last few years.

Cause of Decline.

George D. Phillips, an easterner, held the speed and figure skating championship for years. Mr. Phillips began skating in 1867, and from that year until 1897 he won prizes and for 22 years he held either the speed or figure-skating championship. Mr. Phillips attributes the lack of interest in fancy skating to hockey, which is popular with all skaters now. Clubs have been formed wherever ice can be found for hocky, and every one who can get a pair of skates plays this game. Skates for hockey and for figures are very different. The fancy skater uses a curved skate with a small pivot on the toe. The hocky skate is flat, and is made so that the skater can get from one goal to the other as quickly as possible, and keep firmly on his feet. It is difficult to make curves with a hockey skate. They are not made for that purpose.

"It is a pity that fancy skating has become unpopular," says Mr. Phillips. "It is a fine exercise and lends a charm to skating that is lost when those on the ice simply go round and round the rink. To be a good figure skater grace counts for everything. It is comparatively easy to do the different figures, but to do them easily and gracefully requires practice, and so fancy skating helps one to become graceful in his movements. I am still fond of fancy skating, but unless I can get on the ice early in the day, when the attendance at the rink is small, it is not much pleasure, because I am soon the center of a crowd and that I do not care for.

Fancy Skating Too Tame.

"I don't think there were more skating clubs years ago than now, but hockey clubs have been organized in the colleges, schools, and athletic clubs, and all the time is now devoted to that sport. Hockey is exciting and the public is always fond of anything in the way of a contest that will furnish excitement, and for that reason, I suppose, fancy skating has become too tame except for the more sedate.

At a sporting goods store the man in charge of the skate department said: "We have very few calls for skates for fancy work. Five out of six who come here want the hocky skate. These are flat from toe to heel. Some of them are made to screw to the shoe, others clamp on the sole and heel of the shoe. One skate that is rather popular has a button heel and clamp on the sole. For fancy skating the blade is rockered so that only about one-third of the blade is on the ice. This enables the skater to turn quickly and a complete circle can easily be made within a radius of about 10 feet. For racing the long-blade skate is used. The blade is sometimes 18 inches long and only an eighth of an inch thick.

Swearing Off.

That was my first plunge into the great American athletic sport of after-dinner speaking. Since that time I have lived through a perilous life, and now I have sworn off. I swore off about three years ago, but the way I swore off was like the way the Connecticut deacon swore off eating clams. He ate too many one day, and it made him feel very uncomfortable and pious, and he thought that he would have recourse to prayer, and he said: "Oh, Lord, heal Thy servant of this grievous illness, and I faithfully promise Thee that he will never eat any more clams—very few, if any. Amen."—The Rev. Henry Van Dyke.

Friendly Advice.

"My father died of water on the brain," remarked the man from Ohio.

"Let it be a warning to you," replied the Kentucky colonel, "and stop drinking the stuff before it is too late."

—It isn't what a man knows, but what he doesn't tell, that enables him to pose as a wise guy.

ANTONIO MANETTI

—TELLS HOW—

CHRISTOFERO COLUMBO FOUND AMERICA

By C. R. MacCANN.

AN intelligent young Italian at present in this country, and not long from Italy, bearing the name of Antonio Manetti, tells in his best English, which, by the way, is remarkably good, considering the time he has been in America, how "Christoforo Columbo" discovered the country called "America," named after a dago. He is rapidly acquiring the slang habit, and it will be noticed that he starts in to do some kidding about the time Columbus lands, and from then on makes a burlesque of the whole story. He tells the story to some of his young American friends who led him to believe that they had never heard of Columbus up to that time; didn't even know he was an Italian. This made Tony swell up with pride and he starts right then and there to acquaint them with the history of the greatest man of them all. To make it easy to read, and to give it the Italian brogue, all "A's" must be given the Italian (a) sound, as in "crawl." D is used for DH, and TH is sometimes pronounced DTH.

"You know? Disa guy Christofero Columbo, he wasa joosta very smarta man; he wasa hava some very fina brain ona toppa hisa face. He'sa no gotta no whisker likka some disa aDutchman, an' he'sa very nice looka. Well! One time he wasa hava some very harda t'ought, ab'cause he likka some day to been popula man likka Pittsboorgh Mr. Flinn, an' he wasa scratcha his head to see if he couldn makka soma scheme ab'cause he no gotta no mona, an' alla onced hisa fina brain tolda him disa worrld isa no very flatta likka some book, den he'sa gona finder out what isa de right kinda shape ona worrld, you know. So—he wasa drinka one, two, tree glass fine Chianti—Ah! Datsa d' fina wine—an' he'sa went ina bed an' wasa sleeper up tight. Well! He'sa gittin' up' bout two, t'ree o'clock ina night an' gone out ona sida d' water ina d' sea. It wasa very darka likka sonamasgun, an' alla onced it wasa dayfight wasa gittin' turner on. It was a makka daylight, you know. He'sa wait'n ona side d' hill 'bout couple hour an' half, den he seena de sun amakin' a riser up, an' dat wasa' given him some hidea to makka figure out ab'cause—he wasa some very smarta guy, you know—ab'cause de sun wasa makin' a riser up ina sky, den de worrld isa gotta beena round likka bassaball, ab'cause if he isa flatta likka book, you coulda seena de sun alla once likka flasher, odderwise de light ona sun wasa showin' himaself very slow butta sure and was gittin' lighter up gradual' but a little ona time. See how isa he gotta some bigga, smarta head on hisa should'. He'sa now he very happy ab'cause he'sa some beena a greata man, an' he starta home to makin' drinker up some few glass wine, which hisa slicker eye wasa lookin', he'sa see somet'in likka looka clothes-prop walkin' ona water, stickin' straight ina sky up. He wasa lookin' for 'bout halfer hour, an' alla once he'sa seen ona bottom ona clothes-prop a bigga bunch, looka likka ship ona bottom. Den he knows it'sa very ship comin' up ona rounda side ona worrld shaper likka bassaball. Den he wasa mad with pleasure 'bacuse he'sa gona beena a greata man ina shorta quicka time, hurry up, don'a he?

"But he'sa no gotta no smoovth sailer yet. Ina firsta place, he'sa no getta de price to make investigate; ina second place, Columbo no gotta no ricka friends to makka borrow; ina t'irda place, he'sa joosta makka up ona hisa mine an' nekka de king. So, he wasa makkin' a little, smalla worrld about twenty-fi' incha t'rough ona middle an' pasta some map all over on a top ona worrld. Den he's tooka de worrld and isa gona gitta soma talka to de king. So Christofero Columbo dresser upp'n in hisa Sunday suit an' starta for de king's palace. He wasa walkin' many miles before he'sa camin' to d' king's palance, an' when he'sa getta dere a musketeer stopper him an' yell'm out, "Stop! What do you go'n?" Chris, he tippa de hat—makka salute, you know—an' on account his arms beena fuller un, he'sa dropper de worrld an' brokka Germany ina two times. But he wasa sticker on again widtha spit. 'Ats abright. Columbo aska de musketeer to no gitta scare an' tolda him he'sa no anarchist, he no killa de king for anyt'ing. So de musketeer tooka Columbus an' marcha him to de king's palace.

Columbo he wasa makkin' present his card to de king, an' whena de king isa look'n on hisa card, he say, "Hello, Chris, whadoy ou like? Very glad to meet'n you." Den Columbo say, 'Mr. King, I gotta some fine idea, but I no gotta no money an' t'ought maybe you likka helpa me out'n." So Columbo lay'n down alla hisa plan, map an' sofort', an' makka him un'standa plain. He tolda him abouta de cloothes prop, de ship, an a sun, an he'sa joosta tolda de king he no t'inka de eart' isa flatta likka book, but rounda likka bassaball. An' he say nobody only but a lobstria botta belief likka disa kind. Den de king wasa been insulter an' he wasa lokk'n Ndirrty black hole clear t'rough in Columbo's head an' he allaso tolda Chris he wasa fulla prune an' he'sa gotta crazy in hisa head. Den Columbo, you know, wasa got sick ina head an' wasa gone away witha his hearta alla broker up 'cause he'sa no gona beena a greata man, an' de king treata him likka ndirrty dog. De king he wasa soo mad, he joosta rejecta Columbo out'n de country, but Chris he'sa no giver up de job yetta, but wenta straight to makka interviewn witha Queen Isabella. You know, she'sa Spanish queen: very nice, a gooda, beautifulla girl, an' she'sa gotta stucker on Columbo an' makka "Coo-coo eye" withs him 'cause she know he isa very smarta man. She no gotta lots big bunch money, but she'sa gotta some lous big buncha very fine jewellry, so she wasa joosta tolda Chris to gona finda de besta "pawn-broken" an' seen how much he couldn get for makk'n pawn de jewelry an' he went an' gotta de price alright.

"So de queen tooka de mon' ab'cause she likka su'prisem Chris, so she boughtta de finer ship an' fixer it up de very besta you likk'n. You know, he wasa 'stremely happy now, ab'cause de queen she very much likka him, an' den he know he don't hava to gone ina crazy-house for beena bugga-house ina head, whata de king tolda him, an' you betyou my life he wasa very happy too also.

"So—there wasa a bigga bunch people ona shore ina night one day while Chris an' hisa men wasa maker gitta readdy to start'n. Ev'rt'ing wasa looka pretty good an' alla once Chris wasa makka holler up, 'Let'ng go. I'ma de boss,' an' de ship wasa sail ona way to makka discover d' country. Now, you know, some disa guy ona ship witha Columbo, t'ought Chris wasa daff ina head, too, an' one disa guy was gitt'n so long-gonned hot ina suspend insta he makk a proposisher to t'rown Chris ina water an' makka de fish eater him uppa. Chris say he gotta some friend who deada sure tella de queen. Den dey gotta too mucha scare and joosta put'n him tier up witha a bigga log chains for t'ree, four days. One day when Columbo wasa mak'n lokka t'rough spy'n glass, he spieder somet-ing an' zaida very stronga, 'I gott'ng, I goi-'ng now—I'ma gona beena greata man alle time after all, I tella yous." De rest ofa de gang was camin' ruhner over an' yeller out'n. 'What'sa matter? What'sa matter? You gott'ng again?"

"Chris, he say, 'No sir; I kina see soma hill ona water disa time, ahright; I'ma no monkey-business. I'ma talker sense, you bet.' Den everybody wasa tak'n lookа an' dey couida see witha de nakka eye, an' dey couida feel'n pretty cheapa likka t'irty cents 'cause dey arrester Chris witha bigga chain ona ship, so dey releasa him an' wasa makka alla kinda bow, kneel ona ship, kissa de hand, kissa de feet, kissa de coat, kissa de shoe, an' wasa joosta worshippa him likka he wasa some God. Den dey wasa mak'n stoppa de ship an' was took'n some smaller boat. Columbo say he wasa de boss an' he wasa go first ab'cause he'sa discovern de country. So Columbo carry'n on hisa back a couple bunch banan'. Joosta den dere wasa a couple indiana-man swimmin' rounda de ship ina very funny looka, skinny boat, an' dey asita Chris, 'What do you doin' here?' Chris say 'Oh! 'ats all right Indiana-man. I'ma joosta camin' over an' discovern de country.'

"So, he wasa tekka de Spanish flag an' some buncha men an' dey starten to row de boat for about t'ree-quarta mile. Ona bank dey wasa a bingga bunch Indiana-man withouta no clothes ona toppa side. Dey wasa no gotta no shame, you know; joosta likka cow ina woods. Dey can't help'n you know, 'cause dey no gotta no dresser up. Well! Dey pulla de boat up ina shore an' Columbo he wasa firsta jumpa out an' sticka de Spanish flag down ina mud, an' he'sa proclaimer in bigga voice, he say, 'Stranda back, Indiana-man, I'me discovern de country ina Spanish name,' an' he t'row'm de couple bunch banan' an' de Indiana-man an' 'woma' joosta run away an' eata de banan' likka some dis ndirrty pigger. Den Columbo wasa chiefa lanaloard an' he'sa discovern de country ina de name Queen Isabella. He wasa mosta greata man ahright now. He kina tella ev'rbody to 'Gone way backer up'n sittin' down.' So he wasa loaf'n around dere for one, two, couple time, an' once when he wasa leaner up against a tel'graph pole, he wasa gotta gooda switi kicka ona backa de neck an' when he looka to see what'sa matter, he'sa yellem high out'n, 'Well, I'ma son-amagun, hello, Marconi! Where do you comin'?' 'Oh, I beena 'bout stay'n here 10 year,' Marconi tolda Chris.

"Den Columbo say, 'I joosta wanta man likka you; I wanta senda telespatcha-graph Isabella, queen ina Spain. You know, she'sa my girly protect now.' So Marconi invita Chris, 'Letsa gona drinker up, dere'sa vera nice saloon acrossa de street.' 'Ahright,' say Chris, 'I kina drinker up a few times, don'a you.'

"So dey gone ina saloon an' sitt'n down ona table an' buy'm a few glass 'Pils' beer. Chris, he wasa very mucha disap-polinta 'cause dey no gotta no free luncha. So he invita Marconi sata soma dinna. He makka pusha de butta'an makea a ringa de bell, an' de wait'n boy, he'sa comin' along pretty quicka, an' he say, 'Well gentleman, what do you like?' 'You no gotta no cooka meat?' seka Chris him. 'Oh, sure,' he reply'n. Den Columbo he requesta roasta soup witha bean, couple springa chicka, roasta bef, small porter-loin—hamburgila steka, t'ree roasta eggs ona redda sida cooka, maccaroni ona bigga dish for a smallaparty, an' cream ona peach an' a few drinker up.

"Marconi said he joosta wanta one cockatail, he helpa Chris eaten his dinna. Stuffa wasa cheapa, den and Chris hada pay'n t'irty cents. So dey went out an' Marconi he senda message to queen-a-Spain ona toppa de water alla way. Dey no needa no wire, you know; smarta guya, you know. Dey say ina no wire: 'Dear my Isabella, I'ma joosta arriver ina d' new worrld; it's call'm Americam, an' I tella you for deada sure, de worrld is no flatta likka books, but rounda likka bazza-halla. If you start'n ona place, you gone around an' camin' right backer again. When I'm arriver, I'm joosta t'ink, I'm discoverin de country witha de Spanish flag ina mud firsta.

Mrs. F. Wright, of Oelwein, Iowa, is another one of the million women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Overshadowing indeed is the success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—compared with it, all other medicines for women are experiments.

Why has it the greatest record for absolute cures of any female medicine in the world? Why has it lived and thrived and done its glorious work among women for a quarter of a century? Simply because of its sterling worth. The reason that no other medicine has ever reached its success is because there is no other medicine so successful in curing woman's ills. Remember these important facts when a druggist tries to sell you something which he says is just as good.

A Young New York Lady Tells of a Wonderful Cure:—

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—My trouble was with the ovaries; I am tall, and the doctor said I grew too fast for my strength. I suffered dreadfully from inflammation and doctored continually, but got no help. I suffered from terrible dragging sensations with the most awful pains low down in the side and pains in the back, and the most agonizing headaches. No one knows what I endured. Often I was sick to the stomach, and every little while I would be too sick to go to work for three or four days; I work in a large store, and I suppose standing on my feet all day made me worse.

"At the suggestion of a friend of my mother's I began to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it is simply wonderful. I felt better after the first two or three doses; it seemed as though a weight was taken off my shoulders; I continued its use until now I can truthfully say I am entirely cured. Young girls who are always paying doctor's bills without getting any help as I did, ought to take your medicine. It costs so much less, and it is sure to cure them.—Yours truly, ADELAIDE PRAHL, 174 St. Ann's Ave., New York City."

Women should not fail to profit by Miss Adelaide Prahl's experiences; just as surely as she was cured of the troubles enumerated in her letter, just so certainly will Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cure others who suffer from womb troubles, inflammation of the ovaries, kidney troubles, nervous excitability, and nervous prostration; remember that it is Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound that is curing women, and don't allow any druggist to sell you anything else in its place.

If there is anything in your case about which you would like special advice, write freely to Mrs. Pinkham. She can surely help you, for no person in America has such a wide experience in treating female ills as she has had. Address is Lynn, Mass.; her advice is free and alway helpful.

$5000 FORFEIT if we cannot forthwith produce the original letter and signature of above testimonial, which will prove its absolute genuineness.

FREE FACE BLEACH FOR COMPLEXION

I will send free trial bottle of my FACE BLEACH to any lady sending name and address.
Mme. A. RUPPERT, 6-E-14th St., New York City.

HOW TO OBTAIN A LOVELY COMPLEXION CLEAR & BEAUTIFUL

It is every woman's duty to be as youthful and good looking as possible, and there is nothing which adds more beauty than a lovely complexion, and there is no remedy which will restore the complexion and give one that youthful appearance like Mme. A. Ruppert's World Renowned Face Bleach. This grand remedy clears the skin of every discoloration and impurity, including pimples, freckles, moth patches, brown spots, liver marks, comedones, flesh-worms, blackheads, oiliness, sallowness, muddiness and skin diseases. It accomplishes these wonderful effects by drawing the impurities and discolorations to the surface of the skin and then removing these blemishes by gradually scaling off a slight surface of the outer scarfskin. It does this in so natural a manner as to be entirely harmless to the most delicate complexion, and, having this action, it cannot fail to produce excellent effects.

Most marvelous results are obtained when Face Bleach is used according to my new Special Directions in conjunction with my Egyptian Balm, which nourishes and feeds the tissues and glands of the skin, and adds the finishing touch which refines, purifies and preserves the skin in its pristine splendor, giving it the glow of youth.

Now, in order that every lady reader of this paper may obtain the highest possible effects from the use of my preparations, I will make the following stupendous offer to all callers at the below address: A bottle of my Face Bleach, a trial jar of my Egyptian Balm, a bar of my most exquisite Almond Oil Complexion Soap, my New Special Directions, my book, "HOW TO BE BEAUTIFUL"—all for $2. The price of Face Bleach alone is $2 per bottle, hence you receive the other articles absolutely free.

The Valentine

There comes one night in all the year,
When hearts are trumps and Love is Queen;
When Cupid with his bow is out,
And all the air breathes love supreme.

And on this night, this festal eve,
When Cupid's darts fly far and near,
All swains can bring a Valentine,
And give it to a maiden dear.

Then Cupid who is the God of Love,
And can not see two fond ones part,
Will take the precious offering,
And bear it to the maiden's heart.

Review

FOR some reason not hitherto explained—at least satisfactorily or reasonably—the critical guild has never been favorably disposed to the woman of exalted social position who essays acting either for fame or a livelihood. She may indulge in literature, art, music or any of the hundred avocations, and may even dip into the mysteries of statecraft without her motives being questioned or arousing comment other than praise. But if it so happen that she makes choice of the stage—that seems a different matter. At the first announcement there is an ominous growl of protest, in which is mingled the harsh sound of sharpening knives. There is little encouragement and virtually no one seems disposed to grant the woman either real qualifications or natural ambition to shine in dramatic art. It is forgotten that the woman of culture and refinement may be animated by the same ambitions as come to her humbler sister, whose first object is adopting the theatrical profession may be for the wage it offers. Nor is any consideration given the fact that the woman of education and high social environment has superior advantages to start with, advantages that will come to other aspirants for dramatic honors only by the slow stages of hard study and experience. And no one ever dares to question the common right of women to equal intelligence. Wherefore, then, should motives be considered when the society woman undertakes to make her way on the stage? It is an interesting question and one I should like to have answered fairly.

IT is more than 20 years since Mrs. Langtry made her American debut as an actress; the exact time being November 6, 1882, the place Wallack's theater, New York, and the medium, Hester Grazebrook in "The Unequal Match." There was some interest, though as usual no one took the lady's histrionic efforts very seriously. As a matter of fact Mrs. Langtry had begun her stage career a year or so earlier than this in England, she had lost her fortune, and Mr. Bancroft, the well-known English player, at the request of Henry Labouchere, gave her the part of Blanche Hayes in a production of "Ours" with Kyle Bellow as the hero. The critics received Mrs. Langtry graciously, and on the opening night the presence of the Prince of Wales (now King Edward) and his following, gave the event unwonted distinction. The woman's beauty and refinement of manner impressed the audience, but no one really believed that the erstwhile drawing room favorite was destined to achieve real artistic success. Yet such was the history. Though the critics were right in declaring her methods crude, and her delivery even bad, Mrs. Langtry was not daunted. She set bravely to work to overcome these faults. She boldly essayed roles of higher degree. First came Rosalind, then Lady Macbeth and Cleopatra. She attracted the curious in these parts and interested discriminating audiences as Galatea and Pauline. Finally a performance of Julian in "The Honeymoon" proved that she really possessed histrionic ability and that of an unusual order. From that moment her rights on the stage were not to be denied. Having also real executive talents, she made money not only in America but in England. She comes now to Pittsburgh with considerable artistic prestige, and in a play that has been admired and praised both in New York and London.

IN "The Crossways" is presented a further example of Mrs. Langtry's diversified talents. She is part author of the play, her collaborator being J. H. Manners, the leading man of her company. The story concerns a young wife who resents the groundless jealousy of an elderly husband. As the Duchess of Keensbury, Mrs. Langtry depicts a woman of fashionable English society today, who is said to recall in some particulars both Lady Teazle and Lady Clancarty. The impersonation offers the actress opportunity to present a group of up-to-date dresses that started an orgasy of adjectives among the metropolitan fashionwriters a few weeks since. It is even said that these chef d'oeuvres of the modiste's art arouse applause at every performance.

IT is almost impossible to avoid meeting Clyde Fitch these days. Only a week ago we held communion with this ubiquitous play-founder in "Lover's Lane." Now, mark you, where he comes again, this time in "The Way of the World.'" Not long ago this same Clyde Fitch sailed away to Europe in search of health, they said. He hid himself away in the quiet Alps, where he could calm his shattered nerves, it was rumored that his play writing was done. But he came back again to America, early last fall, and I verily believe the hold of the ship that carried him held nothing else but new plays. Never was this Clyde Fitch as busy as he has been during the past winter. Within two months three new Fitchisms have seen the light at metropolitan theaters, and he has several more in rehearsal. In addition the fellow has contracted to write plays for nearly every actor of prominence on the American stage, all to be ready in time for next season.

"THE Way of the World," which the Grand produces this week, was introduced to Pittsburghers early in the present season by Miss Elsie De Wolfe and her company. It is one of those comedies satirizing society for which Mr. Fitch has a special fondness. There are excellent scenes for nearly all the principal members of the stock company. The exceptionally clever acting of John Mason as Mr. Croyden will be particularly remembered, and Miss De Wolfe had a part in the rather foolish or thoughtless young wife that was teeming with opportunity. There are a number of well drawn character subjects and the smart talk of the gay society butterflies is really worth listening to, couched s it is in the sparkling dialogue of which Mr. Fitch is a master.

ERE I pass finally from the subject of Clyde Fitch and his plays, it will be of interest to note that his fourth production of the season, "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson," is to be presented at the Princess theatre, New York, by Amelia Bingham and her company tomorrow evening. Though I am not informed that Mr. Fitch has derived this comedy from a French source, it has at least the benefit of a French locale. The action takes place in Paris during a carnival. The story is light and frivolous and has mainly to do with the saner elements of society life. But there is said to be a tender and serious love story interwoven that gives to the whole a deeper interest than the French farcical comedy usually possesses. And by the way, has anyone remarked the peculiar penchant Mr. Fitch has recently displayed for long-drawn-out titles. Since his trip abroad all his names have had at least four words—and one at least—six words. The first title of this character was used for Mary Manning's play, "The Stubbornness of Geraldine." Then in succession came "The Girl With the Green Eyes," "The Girl in the Cage," and now we are to have "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson." I am inclined to think Mr. Fitch is getting the idea from Playright Pinero's recent achievements in this line. If he really admires that sort of thing he might go back to some of the old English writers of philosophy and theology. Some of the names they selected for their works were a volume in themselves. Sometimes I imagine Mr. Fitch is playing into the hands of Weber and Fields. What a chance for travesty titles is to be found in those intended to be serious by Mr. Fitch.

AFTER another week of the Rogers Brothers one is fairly well convinced that a large percentage of theater-going people do not want to think. If they had taken the trouble to do so during one of the performances of "The Rogers Brothers in Harvard" the consequences might have been serious. But the fact remains that these two diminutive and extraordinarily lingoed comedians are quite the most popular performers who come to Pittsburgh. Beginning with Monday evening last the string of carriages in front of and on every side of the Alvin reminded one of the opera season, and the general attendance was extraordinary. Manager Kirk says the attraction scored the season's record in the matter of receipts, as it has done in several years past. There is little in the performance of last week to identify it from any of the previous performances of the Rogers Brothers series. The difference between "The Rogers Brothers in Harvard" and "The Rogers Brothers in Central Park" or "Washington," was altogether a matter of a drop in the second act, which gave a fair representation of the Johnson gate at Harvard as seen from the campus. In all other respects the brothers might just as well have conducted their language-cracking experiments in Venezuela or the Land of Azab. Nothing of moment or originality was developed. Young Pat Rooney and Emma Francis are extremely clever, and Hattie Williams sang some few things in a manner that seemed to please everybody. But everything else was much the same as usual. The music of "The Reuben and the Maid" has been worked over until it is threadbare and tuneless. As for the stars they are absolutely the same as they have been for years, aside from one or two new jests and a change of raiment. Seated in the theater one evening last week it occurred to me that in the natural course of events these two young men might still be performing 40 years hence. Would they talk and act then as they do now? I confess the query, inward and silent though it was, gave me quite a turn.

THE years march on and keeping step with them is the perennial popularity of that stirring melodrama, "In Old Kentucky," which will hold forth at the Bijou this week. I don't know exactly how long it is since this play was first produced, but it must be a dozen years ago at least. Age has not detracted from its drawing qualities. It is quite as good a card as "Uncle Tom's Cabin," which is saying a good deal. The story of the play has suffered no change. The extraordinary adventures of the Blue Grass maid on the famous racing mare "Black Bess" and the splendid heroism of her mountain lover could not well be spared. But there are new and up-to-date special features in which the famous pickaninnies take prominent part. The comedy elements of "In Old Kentucky" are always so well sustained that they have had much to do with the long and extraordinary career of this piece. A good company is also promised for the acting parts.

* * *

THE plot of "The Eleventh Hour," which will again be seen at the Empire theater this week, is conventional, except for the climax in the last act, which presents an exhibition of strenuosity calculated to take away the breath of ordinary folk. There is a thrilling fight between hero and villain, during which virtually all the furniture and bric-a-brac on the stage is destroyed by the struggling combatants. Even the scenery suffers in the general destruction. It is all very exciting, though one wonders how the author, Caden J. Carter, and Manager "Jack" McCullough stand the expense. The plot of the play concerns a scheming adventurer and adventuress, who seek the fortune of the heroine's father, and I am informed it is carried by a company of considerable excellence. This is the third visit of this production to Pittsburgh, its success on former occasions warranting its return.

* * *

MARSHALL P. WILDER was the principal figure on the Avenue program last week. Mr. Wilder opened up a new portfolio of mirth and comic adventure and scored a success equal to if it did not surpass those of previous visits to this city. The other acts were up to the usual standard and the same is promised for the bill this week. The list of features is large and includes a number of performers who are new to Pittsburghers. At the head of this group stands Wilfred Clarke and his little company, who appear in a little comedy called "In the Biograph."

FOR the week before Henrietta Crosman's coming the Duquesne theater has arranged an unusually lengthy and interesting list of vaudeville events. There is a good deal of talk about grand opera just now, and its possibilities for next season, which fact makes the engagement of Lucile Saunders, the well-known singer, particularly fortunate and apropos. Miss Saunders was formerly identified with the Metropolitan Grand Opera. Her songs for this week are said to have been selected from her repertoire of classical music. Another singer I note among the list of announcements is Josephine Sabel. Miss Sabel is a splendid specimen of womanhood, and in eastern vaudeville circles is welcomed as one of the strongest cards. Nearly a dozen other acts are listed, and the entertainment to be gotten therefrom should be rich and varied.

* * *

PAUL SHERIDAN'S new "City Sports" follows Fulton's Jolly Grass Widows" at the Academy. The "City Sports" is a popular trade-mark at the show temple named, and it is said the list of vaudeville and burlesque features on its bill this year are quite up to the usual standard. There are several novelties in the list that should prove attractive to Academy patrons.

THE name of Capt. Molineux in the cast of "The Shaughraun" at the Grand opera house last week persistently reminded me of the actor who first essayed the role in Pittsburgh—J. Newton Gotthold, then manager of the house named, and one of the most versatile players that ever walked the American stage. I cannot say in what year these first performances of Dion Boucicault's play were given here, but it must have been about 1876. The production was quite ambitious for those days, and the revolving scene in the third act was an absolute novelty. The local presentation ran for two weeks, also an extraordinary record for those days. I cannot recall the name of the man who was especially engaged to play Conn, but I can still remember the impressions made upon me by the ease and grace of Mr. Gotthold's Capt. Molineux. Mr. Gotthold was one of those actors who realized that in the handling of the little and seemingly trifling details, lies the foundation of the truest and best art. It was this knowledge that made him equally capable and impressive as Iago, or in this comparatively minor part of the Irish romantic play. When this actor played Molineux he almost robbed the hero of his strength, and even when he supported Mr. Booth as the villainous ancient of the Moor, he fairly shared honors with the great tragedian. Mr. Gotthold should have lived longer than he did, if for no other purpose than to show some of the younger actors how to act.

IN some corners of New York it is whispered that Maurice Grau is not sincere in his determination to withdraw from grand opera management. They say that when the smoke finally clears away Mr. Grau will be "induced" to again take up the reins, of course, with better terms and more profitable conditions for the famous impressario. Strange methods obtain in the conduct of stage affairs, and there are none more strange than those under which that branch known specifically as operatic management is conducted.

IF one is to believe all the reports floating about, Shakespeare will come into his own again in this country next year. Already the following revivals are being talked of: Mrs. Leslie Carter and Mrs. Fiske as Lady Macbeth; Annie Russell as Juliet; William Gillette as Hamlet; Richard Mansfield in "The Merry Wives of Windsor;" Nat Goodwin as Bottom, in "A Midsummer Night's Dream;" Louis Mann as Shylock and John Drew and Maude Adams in "The Taming of a Shrew." It is also stated that Julia Marlowe is likely to again take up her former repertoire of Shakespearean roles including Viola in "Twelfth Night;" Beatrice in "Much Ado About Nothing," and Rosalind in "As You Like It." Revivals that are not Shakespearean will be: Rose Coghlan in "She Stoops to Conquer;" Blanche Bates in Ibsen's "Ghosts," and Margaret Anglin and Grace George as Camille.

CHANNING POLLOCK, the enterprising press representative of W. A. Brady, sends me a brief account of Grace George's new play, "Pretty Peggy," which the actress named presented at Chicago on Monday evening last. The play is by Frances Aymar Mathews, a writer well known in Pittsburgh. The story in brief, as rendered by Mr. Pollock, concerns the early portion of the life of Peg Woffington, a mere slip of an Irish girl, who finally makes a great sensation at Covent Garden theater. Romantic interest is derived from the unfortunate love of Peg for David Garrick, and the strong scene is that wherein she learns of Garrick's infidelity. Although attired for the wedding, she turns him out of the house. Then follows the novelty of the drama, a reproduction of the Covent Garden stage, filled with a mob of about 100 people in the body of the house. Supporting Miss George in this production are Robert Lorraine and Annie Ward Tiffany.

Music

LOVERS of chamber music had their first innings of the season with the Kunits String Quartet concert in the new Conservatory hall on Dithridge street, last Tuesday evening. It was interesting to observe how many professionals were in the audience. It was a concert well worth hearing, too. If there is any fault to be found with its length it certainly erred on the safe side, for there were but two quartet numbers on the program. The minuet movement from the Haydn quartet in D minor was one of the most delightful bits of musical color heard in a long time. Each member of the Kunits four is so thoroughly an artist, with such individuality of expression, yet with a well-nigh perfect ensemble, that their playing compares very favorably with better known artists. Miss Clara McClain, contralto, was the soloist, and sang agreeably a group of three songs. Miss McClain possesses a voice of delightful quality, but her tone production is not always good nor is her voice well under control. These, however, are minor faults, which will disappear with more extended study. Miss McClain's voice impresses one as having great possibilities.

A musical novelty offered by Mr. von Kunits and Mr. Burck was a duo for viola d'amore and violin. The Dolmetsch lectures in New York have done much to awaken interest in the old-time instruments, but, although the tone of the viola d'amore is pleasing in quality, it can be of no value to the musical world, except as one of the relics of the past. The viola has completely superseded it in the orchestra.

There will be no home concerts this week by the Pittsburgh orchestra, as they will be on tour through Canada. The members of the orchestra and Mr. Herbert will leave Pittsburgh Tuesday night, going direct to Toronto, Canada, where they give two concerts on the evenings of February 11 and 12, at Massey Music hall, with the Mendelssohn choir of that city. On February 13 they appear at Brantford, Canada, and then return to Toronto for an entirely Wagner program the evening of February 14. This concert tour will also include the Canadian cities of Hamilton, London and Chatham. On February 19 the orchestra gives the last of a series of three concerts in Cleveland, under the auspices of the Tuesday Musical club of that city. The soloists in Cleveland will be Mr. Herbert Witherspoon and Mrs. Seabury Ford. Mr. George Hamlin, tenor, will appear as soloist with the orchestra in the Canadian cities, as well as Mr. Henri Merck, the first 'cello player of the orchestra.

The concerts in Pittsburgh will be resumed next week, February 20 and 21, and continued without interruption until the end of the season.

The usual Sunday afternoon free organ recital will be given this afternoon at 4 o'clock in Carnegie Music hall, Schenley park, by Edwin H. Lemare. Mr. Lemare has prepared a fine program for this recital, and it will be specially interesting to Pittsburghers to know that two compositions by Mr. Gaston Borch, the second 'cello player of the Pittsburgh orchestra, have place on this program; they are "Chant de la Bergere" and "Sarabande." Mr. Borch has written much for the pianoforte and is now at work on an organ fantasia. Guilmant's "Marche Napthale" is the first number on the program. This is one of the most fascinating compositions from the pen of this celebrated French composer and organist. It is very brilliant and aptly portrays the pomp and ceremony of the marriage service. Two charming pieces by Wolstenholme have next place; these are followed by Mr. Lemare's Intermezzo in B flat, and the first part of the recital is closed by a fine Bach number, the Toccata and Fugue in G minor.

Mr. Borch's compositions referred to above begin the second half of the recital, and the closing number is a work noted for its dignity and grandeur, the Toccata in F major, from the fifth organ symphony by Widor. As is customary at these recitals, Mr. Lemare will improvise on a theme to be submitted by anyone in the audience.

Mrs. Charles Bradley Thomson, who resigned from the choir of St. Peter's church January 1, to assist Walter E. Hall's boy choir at Trinity, has not been singing for the past three weeks, owing to the illness of her little son. She expects to resume her position today.

The next Art society reception will take place on Thursday evening, February 19, at Carnegie Music hall, Pittsburgh. Mr. Edward MacDowell will give a pianoforte recital, playing a few of his own compositions. Mr. MacDowell ranks among the first of native born American composers, and is at present professor of music at Columbia university, New York. This will be the only pianoforte recital for Art society members, and it would appear the only one to be given in Pittsburgh this season.

Musicians will be interested to know that the concert-goer, a clever musical weekly, published in New York, has been bought by the Musical Leader, of Chicago, and the papers will for the future be published conjointly.

Following the custom established by the trustees of Carnegie Institute, the organist of Carnegie Music Hall, Mr. Edwin H. Lemare, will give a series of six lectures on following Saturday evenings during the present season. Richard Wagner and the tetralogy, "The Ring of the Nibelung," is the subject Mr. Lemare has chosen. These lectures Mr. Lemare will illustrate by using both the organ and the pianoforte. The course will be free to the public and take the place of the usual free organ recital. Eight fifteen o'clock is the hour at which they will begin. The calendar is as follows:

"Rhinegold," Saturday evening, February 14. "Die Walkure," Saturday evening, February 21; "Siegfried," Saturday evening, February 28, and Saturday evening, March 7; "Gotterdammerung," Saturday evening, March 14, and Saturday evening, March 21.

There will be a piano recital by the pupils of Mr. Harry C. Archer, assisted by Mr. C. S. Nissen, on Monday evening, February 9, at Mr. Archer's studio, in Sixth avenue.

The recital to be given by Leon F. Rains, baritone, assisted by Luigi von Kunits, violinist, and Joseph Gittings, pianist, at Conservatory Hall, Dithridge street, tomorrow, and Monday evening, promises to be one of the musical events of the season. Mr. Rains will be remembered as a baritone of the Grau Grand Opera Company. Mr. Rains is the possessor of a rich and beautiful voice, which combined with his great dramatic ability, numbers him among our best artists. This is probably the last opportunity that musical Pittsburgh will have of hearing Mr. Rains for some time, as he leaves very shortly for a season abroad.

Richard Excites the Poets.

Richard Mansfield took his Brutus and Julius Caesar to Boston a couple of weeks since. The city of culture did not enthuse over the performance, but it started the poets. Quite a lot of rhymes were published. The one given below represents the impressions of Dennis A. McCarthy:

O miracle of acting; wondrous show!
All histrionic records are laid low!
For was there ever such a mighty brute before?
Was thunder ever compounded with such power?
Did e'er a stage crowd weave such mighty spells,
Or mark with such points with such mighty yells?
While as for murder and for sudden death
There is enough to take away one's breath.
Caesar is stabbed. Cassius falls on his sword.
Brutus sits on a sponge which looks most bored.
Wearies his fatal weapon, hay-pin-wise,
And adds poor Shakespeare to the sacrifice.
But greatest yet of all these wonders brave
Through all the annals of the stage to dig
To find a Brutus who could be a prig!

GOSSIP OF PLAYERS

IN the "Confessions of a Playwright," published in the February number of Ainslee's Magazine occurs the following transcript of a letter said to have been sent the author by Mrs. Kendal:

"Many thanks for letting me read the little play. Very pretty and very sad, so sad because it isn't true. Women who live wrongly with men don't suffer. They're the dolls of earth. Only wives, weak, honest wives suffer, through their children—sometimes even when they are happy wives! Believe me—only really virtuous women suffer. They're always being laughed at, or abused. Still, thank you for letting me read the play.

It is an honest but withal very extraordinary expression of opinion which will doubtless come in for much discussion before it is finally laid to rest or forgotten.

Autobiographical yearning is becoming the fad among theatrical personages of prominence. Henrietta Chosman promises to write the story of her girlhood next summer and Sarah Bernhardt admits that she is already engaged upon her memoirs. As Miss Crosman was born at an army post in Dakota territory, her story should be very interesting. Sarah Bernhardt is said to possess a very good literary style which together with the material at her disposal should make a volume of good reading.

There is no longer any doubt that Klaw & Erlanger's new musical farce "The Billionaire," has caught on in New York. With Jerome Sykes in the leading role the piece is crowding Daly's theater at every performance.

While "The Billionaire" is a clever and meritorious thing in itself, no doubt the greater part of its success is to be attributed to the theater scenes in the second act. Klaw & Erlanger have done more to effectually satirize the foibles of New York "first-nighters" and some well-known patrons of theaters in this place than all the cartoonists and comic papers have ever accomplished. And yet it is all done in such a good natured spirit that even the subjects consider it innocent fun and laugh as heartily as their neighbors who escape the shaft of the librettist's wit. The farce keeps an audience in a roar of laughter from start to finish, and when not laughing it is applauding with all the vigor of a first night opening. The great success of "The Billionaire" is no wonder to anyone who has seen it.

Of the entire list of characters which "In Old Kentucky" presents, there is, perhaps, not one less appreciated by the average player than that of Barbara Hatton, the daughter of the sneaking, merciless villain of the play, and the would-be bride of Frank Layson. And yet a glance backward at the various casts appearing in "Old Kentucky" since its first production in St. Paul, August 21, 1892, shows that this particular character has been essayed by some very clever and very prominent actresses.

The first Barbara was Julia Arthur, who appeared in the original cast with such other well-known and slight-priced artists as Louis James, Frank Losee, W. H. Ellwood, Frederic Bock, George Edeson, Marion Elmore (the first Madge) and Mrs. Selden Irwin. Edith Athelstone played the part in the first road company, and Marion Abbott succeeded her for the first run of the piece at the Academy of Music in New York in 1893. She, in turn, was followed by Mary White Hall, who was the first Barbara to appear in "Old Kentucky" at the Bijou theater. There have been several others since then, the most notable being Miss Estella Dale, who fills the role at present, and who, it will be remembered, was the leading woman in Little's production of "Shenandoah." The first Madge when the company took the road, the first appearance being at the Bijou, Pittsburgh, August 28, 1893, was Bettina Gerard. Among her successors were Elsa Ryan, Alice Treat Hunt, Lizzie Evans, Nellie Elton, Hattie Delaro Baines and Alice Riker.

Mrs. Langtry, who will be here during the coming week in her new play, "The Crossways," has long been noted as one of the best gowned women on the stage. Anything that she may have to say on the subject of dress is therefore spoken with some degree of authority.

"Surprising as it may seem," said the English actress recently, "the women who are best dressed are not the women who are most conspicuous in society. One finds better dressing in places that are not so very smart socially than in New York. Women in large cities are too much occupied with other things to devote to the question of dress the amount of time necessary to excel in it.

"I might as well say that the real ladies of society who are constantly in the eyes of the public are not by any means the best dressed women. Others with not so much money to spend, but with more time to devote to dress may be much more in accord with the standard of dressing in the best sense. Women, whose time is taken up by society to the exclusion of nearly everything else, come to acquire a contempt for clothes. The gowns must be changed so many times a day that dressing becomes a word and not a pleasure."

George A. Tyler of Liebler & Co., who returned from Europe last week, where he has been to arrange for new attractions, announces that he has made a contract with Bataille, who dramatized the "Resurrection," for a new play. The contract calls for eight months of the dramatist's services, if the time is needed, to perfect the play. The production is expected to be one of the most elaborate presented here next year. The play will be a story on the time of Louis XIV. Two other contracts, which were made for plays, Mr. Tyler said he was not ready to announce. A play by Guggenheim and Faure was secured for Kyrle Bellew.

Mr. Tyler said that the tour of Mme. Rejane in this country had been postponed for a year, and arrangements had been completed for the appearances of Vesta Tilley, the first week in September, in the "Isle of Boy," which is by Ralph Caine, the son of Hall Caine, and Brandon Thomas, who wrote "Charlie's Aunt."

The New York Tribune of recent date tells the melancholy story of a melodrama called "Hearts Adrift," which was to be produced at Elizabeth, N. J., about 10 days ago, but was not. The chief actor in the play is an airship, and in the afternoon of the day the play was to be produced, a man who made experiments with an airship at Manhattan Beach last summer was called to give this principle a trying out in the back yard of the theater. The actor became so much irritated at the attention he attracted that he rose in the air and floated off, vanishing in the Jersey mist.

Some of the lines in "Peggy from Paris," George Ade's latest work, read as well as they act. Lutie Plummer, chief mogul of Hickory Creek, has been singing to her father in the style taught at Galesburg conservatory, where she had been sent to finish her musical education. The dance being concluded, the old man remarks:

"Lutie, I suppose it is the duty of a parent to be proud of his offspring, but all I can say about this attack you're just had is that it is, perhaps, a good deal better than it sounds."

Lutie—Didn't you like that?

Plummer—I didn't care so awful much for the tune and I couldn't ketch the words—but the rest of it was all right.

Lutie—I won a prize in Galesburg for singing that song.

Plummer—Well, you may fool 'em in Galesburg, but here in Hickory Crick we want music. I paid $150 to have your voice gone over and sandpapered and put in first-class condition, and I want you to sing something we can understand. Sing some of them old songs.

Lutie—Oh, father, they're chestnuts.

Plummer—My daughter, everything worth having in this world is a chestnut. Love is the original chestnut. We've been havin' roses every June since I can remember. I don't get tired of 'em. Babies are chestnuts, but somehow we can't improve on 'em. Gettin' married is a chestnut, but jest the same I've tackled her three times and am on the lookout for number four.

It is a good many years since Pat Rooney, the Irish comedian and dancer, died. Many of the younger theatergoers of the present do not know what they missed in not seeing this quaint performer. Not many who ever saw that quaint figure with its incomprehensible brogue and his uniquely unhandsome face have forgotten him. Put left behind him when he died three talented children. Mattie and Katie are the best known, and Pat Rooney, Jr., was at one of the local playhouses last week. All three have talent for dancing. It is not that they have simply become expert, but they are gifted with a grace and skill peculiar to the Rooney family. Pat Rooney, Jr., is a wonderfully clever little fellow in a different style from that of his father.

New York Dramatic Field Reviewed

The "Earl of Pawtucket" Has a Hearing. Bob Hilliard Retires From "Jim Bludso."

WHAT THE RIALTO IS TALKING ABOUT.

NEW YORK, Feb. 7.—As there is only one new production along Broadway this week, theater habitues have had to go again over the performances, which have settled down into successes. Happily, there are plenty of these, "The Sultan of Sulu," at Wallack's; "Mr. Bluebeard," at the Knickerbockers; "The Wizard of Oz," at the new Majestic; "A Chinese Honeymoon," at the Casino, and a lot more. All these are playing to large audiences, and all have their respective hosts of admirers. Comparisons are odious, so I will not say which I like best. I may remark, however, that Pittsburghers visiting New York cannot afford to miss George Ade's opera, "The Sultan of Sulu," at Wallack's, when going up and down the line for an evening's amusement.

ELIZABETH TYREE
In "The Earl of Pawtucket," Madison Square.

The Earl of Pawtucket.

The one new production of the week was that of Augustus Thomas's new comedy, "The Earl of Pawtucket," at Madison Square theater, on Thursday night, with Lawrence D'Orsay and Elizabeth Tyree in the two principal parts.

Like dozens of other wiseacres in Madison Square theater on Thursday evening, I "always knew" there was a great success in Lawrence D'Orsay, if some playwright would provide him with the proper vehicle. Well, Augustus Thomas has done it. The heavy swell of the West End of London, with the Piccadilly drawl and the Belgravian drawl, is D'Orsay to the life. Why should he not be? There is no material difference in the speech and movement of the gentleman, whether you meet him on the Broadway pave or behind the footlights.

Always a gentleman, whose peculiarities are those of the well-bred man of the London world, brave, with a native abhorrence of sordity and snobbery, who lies cheerfully so long as no mean purpose is to be served by it, and who loves one girl with the simplicity and firmness of a clean-minded man—that is Lord Cardington, as portrayed by Lawrance d'Orsay.

He is not a Lord Dundreary, some of the New York critics to the contrary notwithstanding. He suggests the elder Sothern only very faintly. His character is as distinct and separate from Lord Dundreary as it is from the preposterous English lord whom we remember in "The Little Tycoon," a few years since. D'Orsay gives us a type we can believe in, because we meet him occasionally—and usually in the Waldorf-Astoria.

D'Orsay's attempt to understand "American humah," his constant reference to his little red book of American colloquialisms in his vest pocket, and the satisfaction with which now and then he expounds from it, "He is talking through his hat," and similar gems of the vernacular, is irresistibly comic.

"The Earl of Pawtucket" is written in Thomas' best vein, and is as brilliant as any of the clever farces brought from Paris without their nastiness. There are American authors that can write capital farces, and Thomas is one of them. The three scenes are all in the Waldorf-Astoria, and the atmosphere of America's largest hostelry is reserved with fidelity, particularly in the first act, showing "The Palm Room," where the waiters are regular Waldorf automata, and even the page, walking sadly through the room at intervals, waiting, "Telegram for Mr. Putnam," might have been borrowed from the real hotel for the occasion.

Elizabeth Tyree looks very pretty as Harriet Fordyce, the young divorcee with whom Cardington is in love, and is of course the finished actress she always is. But her light is paled in that of D'Orsay. He is the star, even though he is not advertised as such.

That sterling comedian, Ernest Elton, makes a strong hit as Wilkins, Cardington's "gentleman's gentleman." His character is as true to life as that of his stage master. But then, Elton knows his art through and through, as he has shown us many a time and oft in dozens of widely diversified characters.

Louise Sydneth, as Miss Jane Putnam, a loud-talking, careless, elbowing parvenu is one of the best elements in a well-balanced company of which all are of more or less merit.

Now Old Time Plays.

Frank Lee Short, the manager of fixed ideas, who believes that the twentieth century New York likes to see plays produced in the primitive style of the sixteenth, is not disheartening, because he had only a corporal guard at his "Elizabethan Stage," fragmentary production of "Much Ado About Nothing," on Monday. He points to the probability that the few people present liked his "Much Ado" and is going to give us other old-fashioned plays, put on in an old-fashioned way, but not always by Will Shakespeare. He admires his Shakespeare, but evidently he believes "there are others."

"Much Ado" was presented in Mr. Short's own way, at Mrs. Osborn's playhouse, on Monday. The next day the manager had a heart-to-heart talk with his actors, while the man that sells tickets in the box office scowled in the background. He told them that he could not expect them to get up in a new play each week while playing every night and at the usual matinees. So he took off "Much Ado," and rehearsals have been going on since Monday, in an old English comedy, by Thomas Haywood, entitled "A Woman Killed by Kindness," which, according to present intention, will have its premier on Friday next, the 13th. No foolish superstition about Mr. Short, you see. "Romeo and Juliet" made a good enough impression to cause a demand for other performances, and it is to be done this afternoon and evening, and for the first four nights of next week.

That indefatigable young man, Clyde Fitch, after writing half dozen plays this season, has been working off his superfluous energy in remodeling the Princess theater, giving equal attention to the stage and auditorium. Whatever Fitch suggests nowadays in Broadway theaters is done without question. At least it ever there is any question, the public does not hear it. He makes up his mind he wants a thing, and straightway it is done.

When Fitch demanded that Amelia Bingham and her full company should come in to him from Scranton to hear him read the new comedy, "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson," they came. Miss Bingham is not the kind of young woman to dance to any man's fiddling, unless she feels that it is essential to her own interest. But she acquiesced almost meekly in Clyde Fitch's opinion that she must bring her 30 odd people all the way from Scranton to listen to the author expounding his views on the way his play should be presented. Again, when he told her to come from Philadelphia for another reading rehearsal, down she came, and Mr. Fitch told her a thing or two, that, presumably, paid her for the trouble and expense.

Fitch Gives Orders.

Time was, not so many years ago, when Clyde Fitch had to run after managers and star actresses. Then, he knew what it was to cool his heels in the antechambers of the great. Now, he leaves the heel-cooling process to the other side, and it is whispered along the Rialto that he takes a keen delight in "rubbing it in."

The Princess theater, where Fitch's comedy, "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson," is to be shown on Monday night, was remodeled entirely only last summer, but Mr. Fitch does not like it. He thinks there is room for improvement, and he has had carpenters and decorators busy all this week, except while Louis Mann has been playing in "The Consul." It would take even a bolder man than Clyde Fitch to do anything that would disturb Louis Mann. But, "The Consul" is given only at night and two matinees each week, and there was plenty of time to work a transformation while the dignified Louis was sitting at home in his library, reading his press notices. So it is expected that many surprises will await visitors to the Princess theater on Monday night, altogether distinct from the original bits in the play.

Mary Shaw's playing of the leading role in "Ghosts," as well as the work of the rest of the small company, are being talked about so favorably that more performances of Ibsen's sad play are to be given at the Manhattan theater. The presentation will be made on Tuesday and Thursday, afternoons next. It is talked along Broadway that "Ghosts" has always been considered too heavy to run for more than a single night at a time, so that the giving of several of them in the same week has made a record.

Bob Hillard Quits.

Robert J. Hillard will sever his connection with "Jim Bludso" tonight. The piece will be taken off at the Fourteenth Street theater, and it is understood that it will be shelved—at least, for a time. The trouble is that it is such an expensive production that it cannot be given profitably, except in certain cities. It has made good impressions in New York, and will doubtless repeat its success elsewhere. But, the difficulty which faces so many managers is that of booking a play profitably, and many a good drama is lying in a pigeonhole because there are no theaters available for it.

I have little doubt that Pittsburgh will see "Jim Bludso" eventually, but whether "Handsome Bob" Hilliard will be in the title role is a question. I do not know whether he means to go back to stock-broking, but am inclined to think not. He has made such a hit as the fellow that held "her nozzle again' the bank," that there are a number of managers after him. Of course, his ability has been known for many years, but when an actor makes a new hit in a new play, it always gives his popularity a boom with managers, and that is what has happened to Bob.

One of the interesting "Student's Matinees" is to be given by Adelaide Stanhope Wheatcroft's pupils, at Madison Square theater next Tuesday afternoon. You remember that Mrs. Wheatcroft is the widow of that old Pittsburgh favorite, Nelson Wheatcroft, who founded the dramatic school, which she still conducts. The bill for Tuesday comprises "Cupid's Messenger," a romantic episode in one act; "Consuelo," a four-act comedy drama, by Willis Steell, and a one-act comedietta, "Who's to Win Him?" This is a long program for the performance, and it will give the students an opportunity to show their talents in several different lines. There is always an immense audience at these "trying out" performances, and managers are practically interested in them because there is the possibility of finding an embryo star among the ambitious young men and women.

George Ade dropped into Wallack's to see his "Sultan of Sulu" on Wednesday evening. It was the first time he had viewed it since it left Chicago. He said the experience was restful, after a long journey.

Four Broadway successes, which have been running for a more or less long time will wind up in this metropolis next Saturday night. They are Julia Marlowe in "The Cavalier," at the Criterion, Viola Allen, in "The Eternal City," at the Victoria; "The Bird in the Cage," at the Bijou, and "When Johnny Comes Marching Home," at the New York.

At the Criterion the next production will be the musical comedy, "The Jewel of Asia," at the Bijou; Marie Cahill, in "Nancy Brown," at the Victoria; Blanche Walsh, in "The Resurrection," and at the New York, Williams and Walker.

Julia Marlowe's new play is entitled "The Fools of Nature," and is by Henry V. Esmond.

In Augustus Thomas' new comedy, "The Earl of Pawtucket."

BEAUTIFUL COSTUMES

Some of the Gowns in the Grand's Play, "The Way of the World."

Some of the handsomest gowns ever worn on a Pittsburgh stage will be shown in "The Way of the World," Clyde Fitch's society comedy at the Grand this week, when the ladies of the company will appear in some of the very latest modes, the creations of Roak of Pittsburgh. The dresses were personally designed by Roak and represent the very latest things in all sorts of gowns, from automobile to street, house, garden and evening gowns. Miss Eva Taylor especially, whose excellent taste in the matter of stage costumes has won for her the title of the best dressed actress in America, will wear some especially charming creations.

In the first act, during the automobile scene, Miss Taylor appears in a gown of pale blue cloth, cut walking length, made over a lining of pale blue taffeta. The jacket is short and opens in front over a dress of lace and mull. The sleeves are slashed below the elbow to let in a double ruffle of lace. Stitched straps of the cloth trim the bodice and ends at the waist line, continuing on the skirt, each being finished at the knee with a blue cloth button. From the knee to the edge of the skirt inverted pleats open into a flare flounce. With this very chic over costume Miss Taylor wears a hat composed entirely of green leaves. Here and there a few scarlet berries peep out, and a cluster of the ripe fruit droops in graceful fashion over the actress' dark hair at one side.

At the Croyden home, in the second act, Miss Taylor wears an exquisite cream colored chiffon, made over an underskirt of pale yellow satin. The over garment of black lace hangs loosely from the shoulders to the end of the plain skirt. The body of the gown is garnitured daintily in festoons of gold lace fastened together with small clusters of pale pink rosebuds. A girdle of pale pink panne velvet confines the flimy loose-fitting front at the waist line.

Miss Minna Philipps appears in the first act in a smart cycling costume of tan broadcloth. The skirt is accordion-pleated and fitted carefully over the hips. The jacket is a Norfolk affair, belted at the waist with a narrow strip of black patent leather. Oxford ties and stockings of suede match the costume. In the christening scene Miss Philipps wears an elaborate hand-painted frock of pin-tucked chiffon. The design is in orchids, American Beauty roses and violets. The gown is made over an interlining of white taffeta. The bodice is cut with an English neck and the yoke is of Cluny lace, which is used as a further embellishment upon the corsage and sleeves. At the musicale Miss Taylor is seen in an evening gown of pink chiffon in shades deepening from palest flesh at the decolletage to deep cerise in the form ruffle which edges the swirling skirt. The odd sleeves are of gathered tulle. They flow from the shoulders and are caught up with roses of pale pink panne. These exquisite flowers outline the corsage, from whence a crystal and silver passementerie falls in a shimmering shower to the knees.

In the third act Miss Irene Hobson, as Mrs. Neville, wears a decollete gown of brocaded yellow silk, embroidered and painted in gray tulips, the bottom flowers being heavily embroidered. The others, as they reach the waist line, are painted. The waist is made of Liberty chiffon and worn with jewels. It is caught over the shoulders with little straps. A rare Parisian jewel belt is worn. The wrap worn with this beautiful gown is a yellow brocaded silk falling to the floor, trimmed in accordion-pleated chiffon of a dahlia tint, lined with yellow satin, and has big flowing sleeves with yards and yards of pleating falling almost to the floor. In this act Miss Hobson wears her hair parted in the middle, done in a coiffure falling very low on the neck. In the fourth act Miss Hobson wears a rustling street gown of crepe de-meine trimmed in black velvet.

Grand—Way of the World.

The Way of the World," considered by eminent critics the cleverest of the many Fitch plays, will be seen at the Grand this week with the full strength of the stock company in the cast. When this piece was given in Pittsburgh early in the season at another theater it proved one of the most delightful entertainments seen on a Pittsburgh stage in many seasons. In the hands of the piece Stage Director Huffman will have unlimited opportunities for the display of his artistic skill in the stage settings, especially in the musicale party showing a fashionable entertainment at the home of one of New York's four hundred. The opening scene of the play is particularly interesting, showing Central park in New York, with several of the leading personages riding in automobiles. Another novel scene is the christening in act IV., in which a real live baby is introduced, and a bishop in full robes. A special feature of the production will be the handsome gowning of the women. Miss Taylor, Miss Philipps, Miss Ballou, Miss Hobson, Miss Gale, Miss Sumner, Miss Cummings and Miss Gray will display some of the very latest creations, made especially for this production by Roak. In the musicale scene Miss Ethel Rowsthorne will sing Ethelbert Nevin's "Rosary." Miss Taylor will essay the part created by Miss DeWolfe, while Mr. Ingersoll will be seen as Mr. Croyden, the part originally played by John Mason.

An interesting feature of the cast will be the appearance of the beautiful Alabama actress Miss Irene Hobson, who will have one of the leading roles in "Mrs. Nevill," the same part she played in the original production of this piece with Miss Elsie DeWolfe. Miss Hobson will wear some stunning gowns, and the fact that she is a cousin of Capt. Richmond P. Hobson, which family, by the way, has many connections in Pittsburgh, will give society an especial interest in her appearance.

A Big Production.

What is expected to be the most pretentious scenic spectacle of the season is promised at the Grand opera house next week, when Sardou's tragedy, "Cleopatra," is presented. Manager Davis succeeded in perfecting arrangements with the Fanny Davenport estate for the rights to produce Miss Davenport's version of this play, and Stage Director Huffman will present it with a series of scenes calculated to surpass anything of the kind yet attempted at this theater. A special feature will be made of the famous tempest scene in the fifth act, which will probably surpass in realism anything in the way of a storm scene ever shown on the local stage. The tempest occurs after the invocation of Cleopatra, when the heavens gradually grow dark, the lightning becomes startlingly vivid, thunder rolls in deep volume, while the wind blows in a perfect hurricane. In the six acts of the play there is fine opportunity for magnificent scenic effects. The sale of seats for "Cleopatra" will open at the box office tomorrow morning.

Avenue—Continuous Vaudeville.

Manager Harry Davis of the Avenue theater presents another big list of attractions for this week, and there is no danger of continuous vaudeville losing any of its popularity with the patrons of his place of amusement. Heading the celebrities is Wilfred Clarke, a comedian of excellent reputation. Mr. Clarke comes from a family of actors being a son of the famous John Sleeper Clarke and a nephew of Edwin Booth. In presenting the playlet "On the Biograph" he is assisted by a company of capable artists. There isn't a dull moment while they are on the stage.

Quite in keeping with this headliner is the array of vaudeville talent engaged by Mr. Davis. The program, as usual, will be a varied one. Among the features will be the Heras family, father, mother and children, in a startling acrobatic performance; Hickey and Nelson, a pair of exceptionally clever entertainers in their latest skit, "Twisted and Tangled;" Nanyon's wonderful performing tropical birds, one of the largest novelties of the year; Miss Anna Caldwell, singing comedienne; Lawrence Crane, the Irish magician, a worthy successor to the late Herrmann; Bonnie Thornton, monologist and refined entertainer; Tom Hefron, a one-legged song and dance specialist and acrobat; Edna Murilla, the Cuban sylph, in artistic songs and dances; Ranzetta and Belair, acrobatic comedians; the cinematograph with new views, and others, combining to make up a bill of 15 excellent acts.

Alvin—Mrs. Langtry.

The return of Mrs. Langtry and her English company after an absence of several years will be a welcome event at the Alvin theater during the coming week. The famous English actress brings with her a new play, entitled "The Cross-Ways," of which she is the principal author. Mrs. Langtry has devoted much of her leisure in the past to the writing of short stories, and this is the first venture in the dramatic field. From the reception of "The Cross-Ways" in England, and especially in London, where it was given at the request of the king and queen, Mrs. Langtry is to be congratulated on her first attempt as a playwright. During the run of the play at the Garrick theater in the New York it was especially noted that Mrs. Langtry had made rapid strides in her art and was no longer to be classed only as in the ranks of "professional beauties." The entire company that will support Mrs. Langtry has been brought from England, and the production of "The Cross-Ways" at the Alvin theater will be an exact reproduction of the special performance given by Mrs. Langtry at her theater in London, the Imperial, in the presence of the members of the royal family.

Bijou—In Old Kentucky.

This should be a banner week at the Bijou, for tomorrow afternoon "In Old Kentucky" will begin an engagement there, with new scenery and specialties and a strong company. Jacob Litt has secured one of the best troops of pickaninny dancers and musicians in the country. "In Old Kentucky" seems as fresh, from an attractive standpoint, as the first season it stirred the country, and that was 10 seasons ago. This piece, with its central figure the girl Madge Brierly, the only survivor of a family almost wiped out by a feud with the family of Lem Lindsay, is one of the strongest plays ever written about the blue grass country. This girl falls in love with Frank Layson, who comes of a wealthy family of Kentucky, but whose fortunes have been depleted. The episodes leading to the denouement are all strongly dramatic, but all ends happily for the little mountain maid and her lover. In the cast this week will be found George Heath, William T. Clark, George Caine, George W. Deyo, Ollie Turner, Robert Bibbs, James Roberts, John M. Powell, Harry Swinton, Bessie Barriscale, Estella Dale and Florence Stever.

Duquesne—Refined Vaudeville.

Duquesne theater patrons have a wide choice of standard types of vaudeville next week, the offering including 12 and perhaps 13 acts. The headline announcement is Lucille Saunders, the well-known operatic prima donna, formerly identified with the Metropolitan grand opera forces, who will be heard in one of her characteristic repertoires. Others are Mr. and Mrs. Edward Esmonde, in a bright play called "The Soldier of Propville;" Josephine Sabel, the handsome singer of ballads; Press Eldridge, whom every one knows; Smith and Fuller, in a novel musical act; O. T. Fiske and Nellie McDonough, in a sketch combining humor and pathos; John Leclair, juggler; Loraine Armour and Charles Baguley, versatile funmakers; Simmons and White, minstrels of the old school; the Smedley sketch club, and the Edison kinetograph.

Empire—The 11th Hour.

This week at the Empire will be presented Lincoln J. Carter's comedy-drama, "The Eleventh Hour." It is a work replete with comedy and pathos. The scene of the play being Chicago, the home of exciting events, one can easily imagine the result. Mr. Carter introduces for the first time on any stage a reproduction of a complete block tower, which is used on all railroads to check the running of trains, thus insuring the safety of thousands each day. The last act is the beautiful drawing room of one of Chicago's richest men. It is in this scene that the hand-to-hand struggle for life occurs. The vases and bric-a-brac are smashed and it appears as though a tornado had passed through. It will be presented by an excellent company, carrying their own special scenery.

Academy—City Sports.

The Big City Sports show, one of the most popular burlesque attractions on the road, begins a week's engagement at the Academy tomorrow evening. The attraction has many new features this season. The opening burlesque, "A Mistake in Society," is highly seasoned with bright lines, catchy music and ludicrous situations, diversified with marches, medleys, ballets and popular melodies. The vaudeville portion of the entertainment takes in such well-known artists as Crissie Sheridan, the Everett trio, European sensational acrobats, Short and Edwards, the monarchs of music; Hazel Burt, America's beautiful vocalist, Renzetta and La Rue, eccentric comedy acrobats, and Beeson, Ferguson and Beeson, in a unique comedy and dancing act. A burlesque entitled "Fun at Brighton" will be presented, showing the entire force of the company, augmented by 20 pretty and shapely women and 10 funny comedians, with an abundance of sparkling and catchy music.

Miss Crosman's Engagement.

One week from to-morrow night Henrietta Crosman, in her new play "The word of the King," will be seen at the Duquesne theater. The friends of the popular player and they are legion in Pittsburgh—will be out in force, and the event as a whole will be of extraordinary character. It is told of this new play of Miss Crosman's that she has been more successful in it than she was in "Mistress Nell," her earliest triumph. In New York at Wallack's, for instance, Miss Crosman doubled her "Mistress Nell" receipts for the same period. This, however, was principally because of the size of the theater. In Philadelphia, the receipts for a single performance exceeded $4,000 and the seven performances was over $17,000. There will be two matinees during the week of Miss Crosman's engagement, on Wednesday and Saturday. The advance sale of seats opens at the box office on Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock.

Kyrle Bellew Coming.

Kyrle Bellew, the distinguished English actor, will appear at the Alvin theater the week of February 16 in Harriett Ford's dramatization of Stanley Weyman's famous story, "A Gentleman of France." Mr. Bellew will be supported by Miss Eleanor Robson, now rapidly duplicating the meteoric rise of Maude Adams, and a powerful cast of players. The production throughout is promised to be the "original," precisely as given at Wallack's in New York for 150 nights last season.

"Floradora" has just been presented in Paris and has scored a most pronounced success.

Thomas E. Shea will be seen at the Empire theater in a repertoire of three plays. He opens with the "Pledge of Honor," which will be followed by "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" and "The Bells."

George Sidney, who heads the company that is to present "Busy Izzy" at the Bijou next week, is surrounded by a company of 40 people.

The famous Woodlawn Whang-Doodle band of pickaninnies with "In Old Kentucky" at the Bijou this week will parade downtown at noon tomorrow.

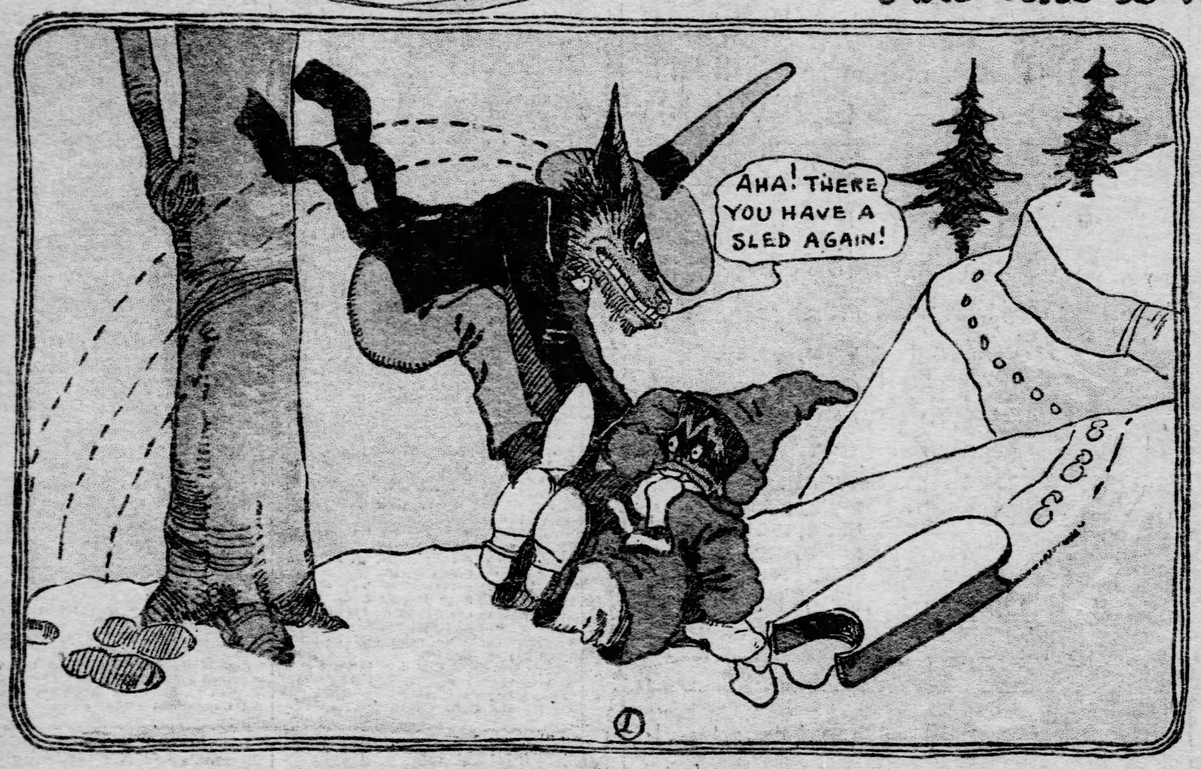
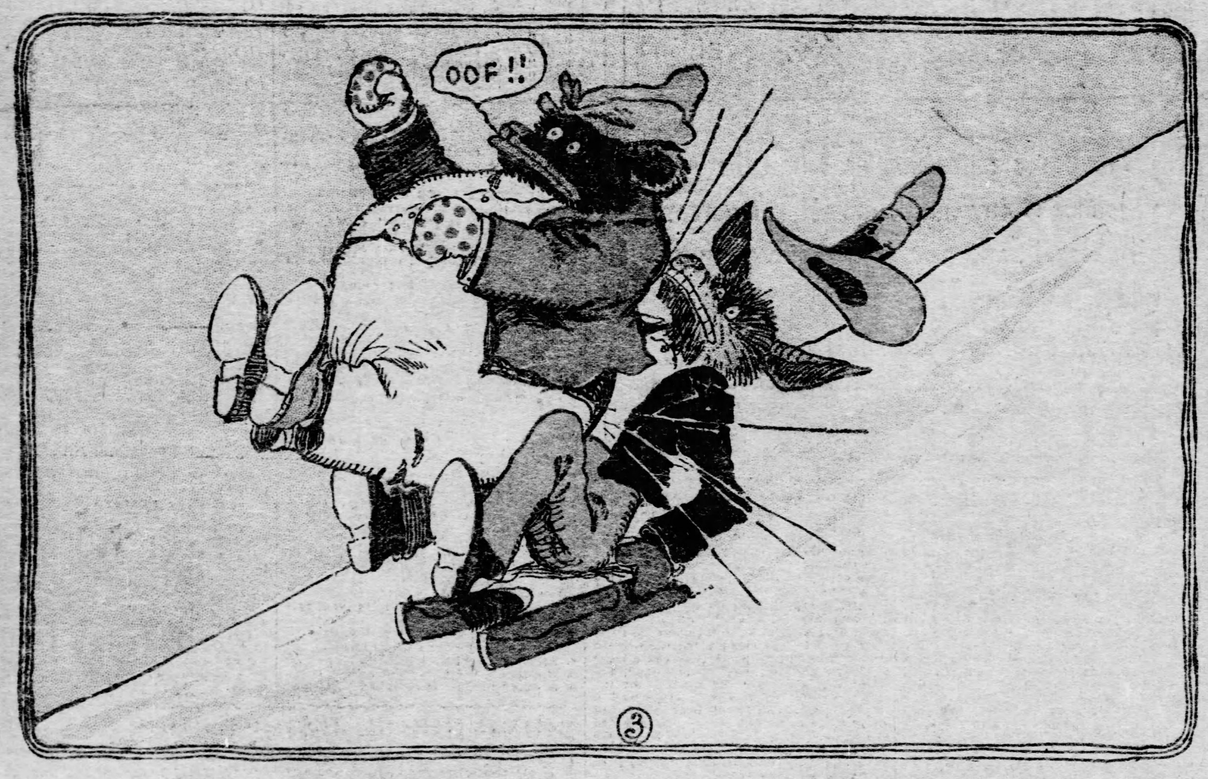
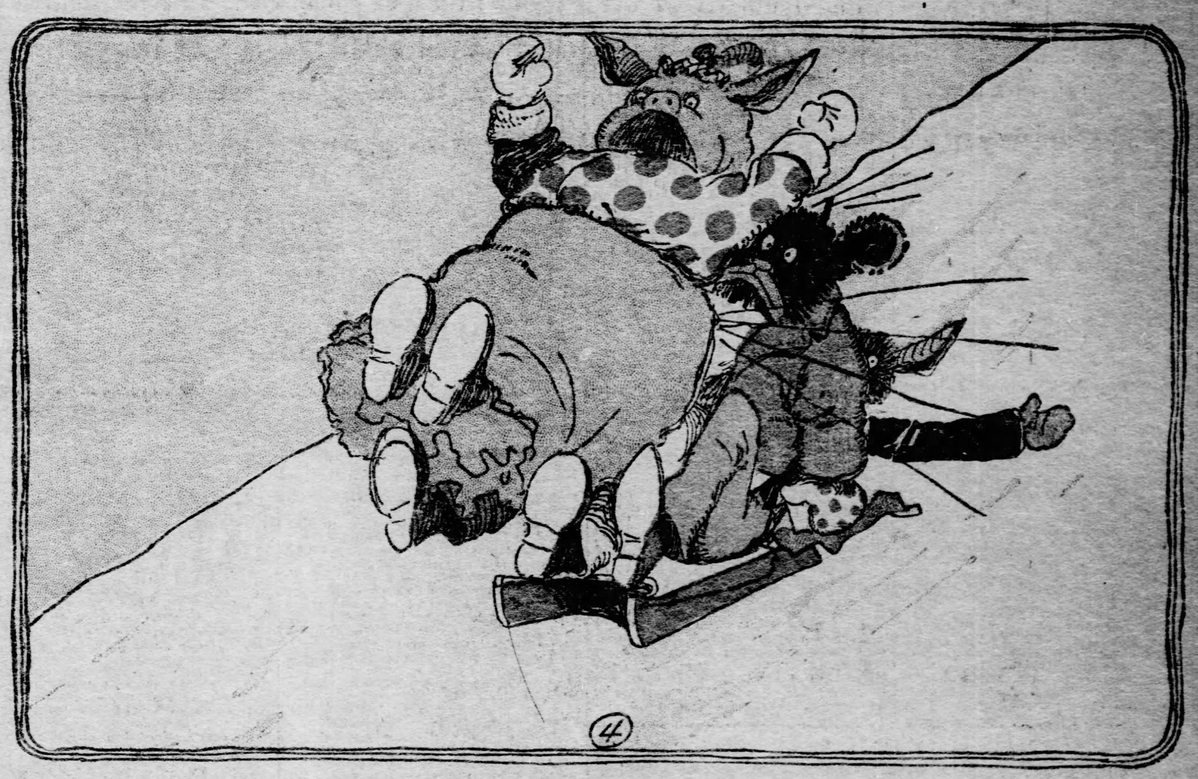
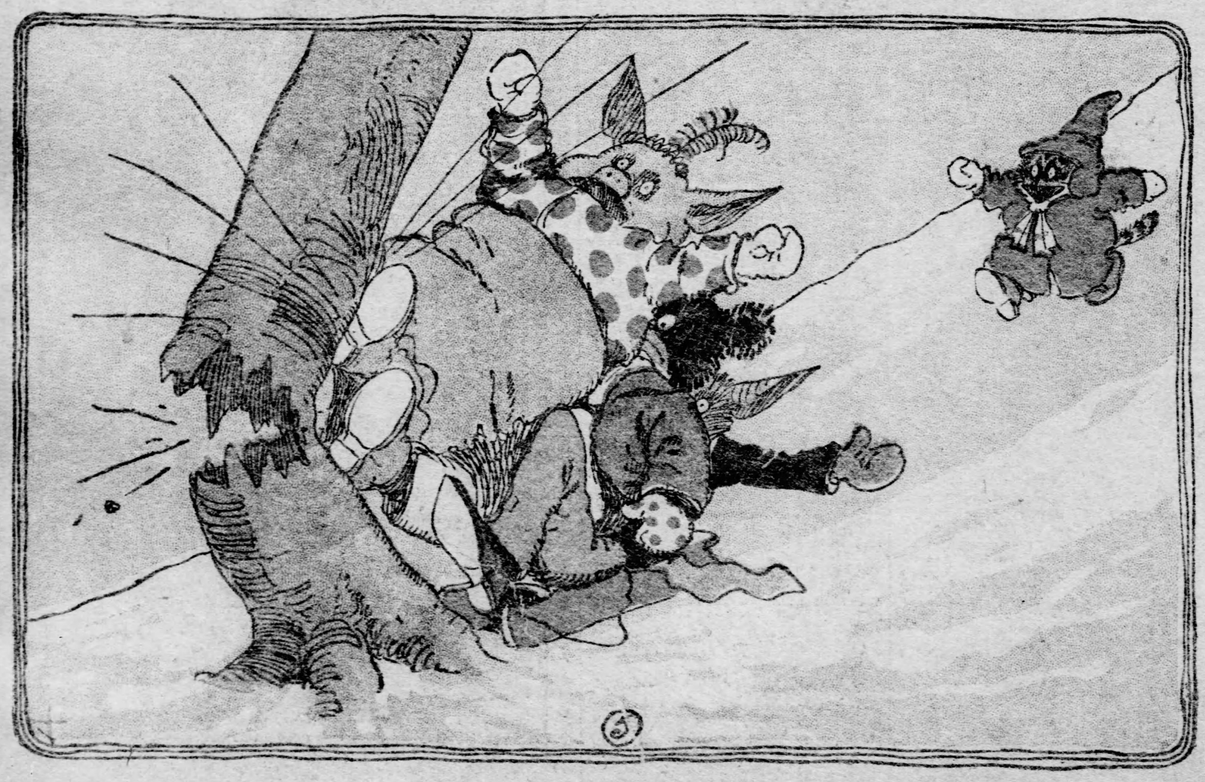
AND THIS IS WHAT HE GOT FOR TAKING THE COON'S SLED AGAIN.









St. Valentine Among the Young Folks

THE FIRST VALENTINE

Written for The Sunday Gazette by BOYD JENIKE.

"Good morrow, Valentine,
First 'tis you, then 'tis mine,
So please give me a Valentine."

LET us see! It must have been sent a long time ago—many years before America was discovered, that is. If it was really sent at all; for St. Valentine's day, as it is observed at the present, would never be recognized by the boys and girls of the olden time. In fact, we know it was not sent. Valentine then meant something entirely different from what it does now. It was not a thing; it was a person. There is no immediate connection between the customs of this day and St. Valentine the saint, in whose honor it took its present name.

There were a good many patron saints by this name, and it would be very difficult to choose the real St. Valentine after whom the day was named, though away back in the early history of Christianity, we do find the churchmen substituting the names of the saints for the billets the Roman boys and girls used to make out for each other on the 6th of February in commemoration of their goddess Februata Juno.

The good fathers of the early church thought it far better for the Roman youths to think of the life of some saint on this day, than to be idly dreaming of love and its wonderful potency for curing all the ills of the youthful heart; and, doubtless, they were right in this, though we are afraid they themselves believed that the ghosts of the departed walked abroad on the evening before St. Valentine's day. But that's neither here nor there. We set out to tell something about the first real valentine as it was used in the early history of other nations. England especially.

As has been said, valentine was not a letter containing a love poem or a comic picture at that time. It was a real person. We are not so sure that King Alfred was not a valentine to some bright-eyed English maid, though, perhaps, he was too busy with his studies when a boy to give a passing thought to such practices as occupied the time of the boys and girls at a later period. However, we are sure our quaint old friend Chaucer knew of this custom, for the practice is mentioned in one of his works. Imagine, if you will, a whole company of young men and young women, clad in the quaint garb of that period, gathering together before a rousing fire on the eve before St. Valentine's day and putting an equal number of names of both sexes, written on slips of paper, into two separate vessels, from which each drew one of the opposite sex, which was to be his valentine. If you can picture this to yourself, you have the original idea and custom of this day. It must have been lots of run! It was a case of

"Now Andrew, Anthony and William
For Valentines draw Pride, Kate and Jillian."

The person whom each drew was to be his valentine for a certain length of time, usually one year, that is, they were to dance attendance upon each other during this period; and it sometimes happened that marriage was the result of this playful custom, though no one was bound to accept the choice brought about in this manner. The custom, perhaps, arose from the popular belief that all the birds and animals paired on the 14th of February, for Shakespeare in his "Mid Summer Night's Dream" has

——— St. Valentine is past;
Begin these wood-birds but to couple now.

However, we find not a few objecting to this manner of mating among the young people, as in the following words: "A lady of wit and qualities whom you well know, would never put herselfe to the chanse of a Valentine—shee would never couple herselfe by cheyre."

But the swains and lasses, notwithstanding all this, went on choosing Valentines in this way and many ridiculous and awkward things happened as a result. Here is an extract from a letter written by one young miss to her bosom friend at about this time: "Last Friday was Valentine Daye and the night before I got five bay-leaves and pinned four of them to the four corners of my pillow and the fifth to the middle, and then, if I dreamt of my sweetheart, Betty says I should be married before the yeare is out. Then I took a harde boiled egge, removed the yolke, filled it with salt, and, before I went to bed, ate the whole, shell and all, without tasting a drop of water. Betty says I will marry the man I dreamt of, but I am not telling you who it was, for I knowe you would laugh. But to make sure, I took the names of all the young men staying in the house, wrote each on a slip of paper and rolled it separately in a ball of clay. Then I threw them into a vessel of water. The first that came to the top would be the man I was to marry. And what do you thinke! That of Mr. Blossom came to the top first. I was so overjoyed that I went around the next morning with my eyes tightly shut for fear I should see some one else first."

The poor dear! she must have had a dreadful time with all these divinations, and if she finally didn't get Mr. Blossom it wasn't her fault, and it wasn't because she did not deserve him. Of course the up-to-date young woman doesn't have to resort to such machinations to cast a spell over the young man of her heart. She is no such timid creature. She simply "lays for him," as only a hustling young American woman can, and before long the "chappie" on whom she has set her heart, if he has wit enough, realizes that he is "it" and yields gracefully. It often happened in the olden time that too many names were put in the hat, and, consequently, some one was sure "to get left." This happened to one rosy-cheeked English lassie once, and she got so angry that she cast the slip into the fire. However, a gallant in the person of some swain, snatched it out and thereupon indited the following lines in commemoration of the event:

"I, like the angel, did aspire
Your Name to rescue from the fire,
My zeal succeeded for your name,
But I, alas! caught all the flame!
A meaner offering thus suffic'd,
And Isaac was not sacrific'd."

We don't know whether this was the first poem ever written to one's Valentine or not, but, at any rate, the custom of writing these tender billets spread rapidly over England and France not long afterward. Of course this was only when the gentle folk took the matter in hand, for the country people were content to tell their Valentines of their ardent love instead of writing it. And again, about all they could do was to write their own names, let alone a love poem to their Valentines. As we were saying not many years elapsed before all the gentry of the country followed the vogue of writing poems to the object of their affections on St. Valentine's Day, and it hasn't been so long ago here in America since this was still the custom. The comic Valentine is a comparatively new departure. The following is a Valentine as it was "writ" in the olden time by a lover "To Dorinda on St. Valentine's Day."

"Look how, my dear, the feather'd kind,
By mutual caresses joy'd,
Bill, and seem to teach us two
What we to love and custom owe.

Shall only you and I forbear
To meet, and make a happy pair?
Shall we alone delay to live?
They day an age of bliss may give.

But oh! when I the proffer make,
Still, coyly you refuse to take
My heart I dedicate in vain,
The too mean present you disdain.

Yet, since the solemn time allows
To choose the object of our vows,
Boldly I dare prefer my flame,
Proudly to be yours by any name."

We don't know whether they married and lived happily ever afterward or not—we hope they did, for, surely, the "sweet young thing" could scarcely resist such an amorous appeal for a helpmate. This brings us down to the era of the comic valentine. We don't know who sent the first one of these ridiculous things, whether it was sent as a joke or in a spirit of malice. At any rate it opened up a new field for playing practical jokes and settling up old scores.

Many of the comic valentines sent on this day really convey a lesson if we will only find it out in a good-natured manner, while others are the sheerest nonsense and mean nothing whatever. This is a gala day with the small boy—a chance to cure all the real or fancied grievances of his childish heart, an opportunity "to get even wid de fellers" who have trampled upon his feelings. Of course that little "stuck up" Bobby Brown will get one, and, "If that don't jar him, I'll miss my guess," is the comment as he selects one suitable for the said Bobby. And Willie Green, the "stingy guy who won't lend a feller his sled," gets "soaked" in his turn. Then the sister of Johnny Smith, who is "too nice to play wid a feller because his hands is dirty and his clothes ragged," gets shown up in her real or fancied colors. "And, Oh, Lordy! I almos' forgot that cross, old maid of a teacher who keeps a feller in to do his lessons, when he wants ter go skating, and whips a feller because he soaks a bloke in de eye for pickin' on his sister, when all de uders said it was fair. Say, miss, gimme de ugliest and sourest old maid you've got. That ain't haf as ugly and cross as she looks, but I guess it'll have to do. Won't them verses jess suit her? And, say, miss, have you got one of a real nice little girl with curls hangin' down her back? Ain't she a little beaut, Bill? I'll send that to Daisy Bell, though it ain't half as purty as she is."

Everything had gone lovely in buying the valentines up to this time, and had Bill's heartiest commendation. But the pretty one to Daisy Bell had touched a tender spot in his own heart, for he had "an eye on her" himself. A heated argument followed and soon the air was filled with flying hats, swinging arms and the bluest kind of oaths. The clerk finaly got them separated and told them to get out. On the way they patched things up by each agreeing to send her a pretty valentine.

This matter of settling old scores by means of the comic valentine is not confined to the pranks of the small boy alone. It is a custom often practiced by adults, and, indeed, it's pretty hard to resist the temptation to send one to the young man across the street, who plays a flute at all hours of the day and night to the no small annoyance of all honest citizens who wish to read or sleep. Yes, we think we will send him one anyhow. It won't do any harm and it may do lots of good for the suffering humanity in the neighborhood. We finally hit upon one of a tall, thin youth with long hair, who is represented as blowing a flute. We think that it's juts the thing and the more so since the following suggestive lines are below the picture.

"He bought a flute, this slim galoot,
And blew from morn till night.
He blew and blew and thinner grew,
'Till a gust of wind came in one day
And blew him clean away."

We sent it and chuckled to ourselves with the satisfaction it gave us in doing so. The young man, no doubt, grasped the full import of this dire prophecy relating to his untimely end, for no more symphonious strains of a piping flute wafted across the street on the balmy breezes of the summer night, which every other human being was trying to sleep. This gave us so much satisfaction and relief that we concluded to work the spell on the worthy lady who keeps our boarding house. Of course, we realized that we wouldn't get a bite to eat if she should find out who sent it, but, as we took no one into our confidence, we felt safe on that score. Taking a few precautions in the matter of disguising our handwriting by contorting the letters into all sorts of imaginable shapes, we sent the letter and awaited developments. The following is the little ditty that seemed to suit our case to a letter.

"Nobody knows what the boarders eat,
Pass no remarks about the meat,
Shut your eyes and hush your mouth
At the Hungry-starving Boarding House."

The result was phenomenal and it only needed a few more such days in the year to make us all fare like lords. It was like living in a land flowing with milk and honey for a few weeks, but things went back to the good old hash three times a day. And, perhaps, if we were feeling real mean, we would send the man who owed us a V a reminder in the form of a comic valentine that the said sum was still unpaid and that it would come in mighty handy to us at this time. Of course, we never treated our best friend in that manner. It was only the professional who had caught us unawares.

A VALENTINE.

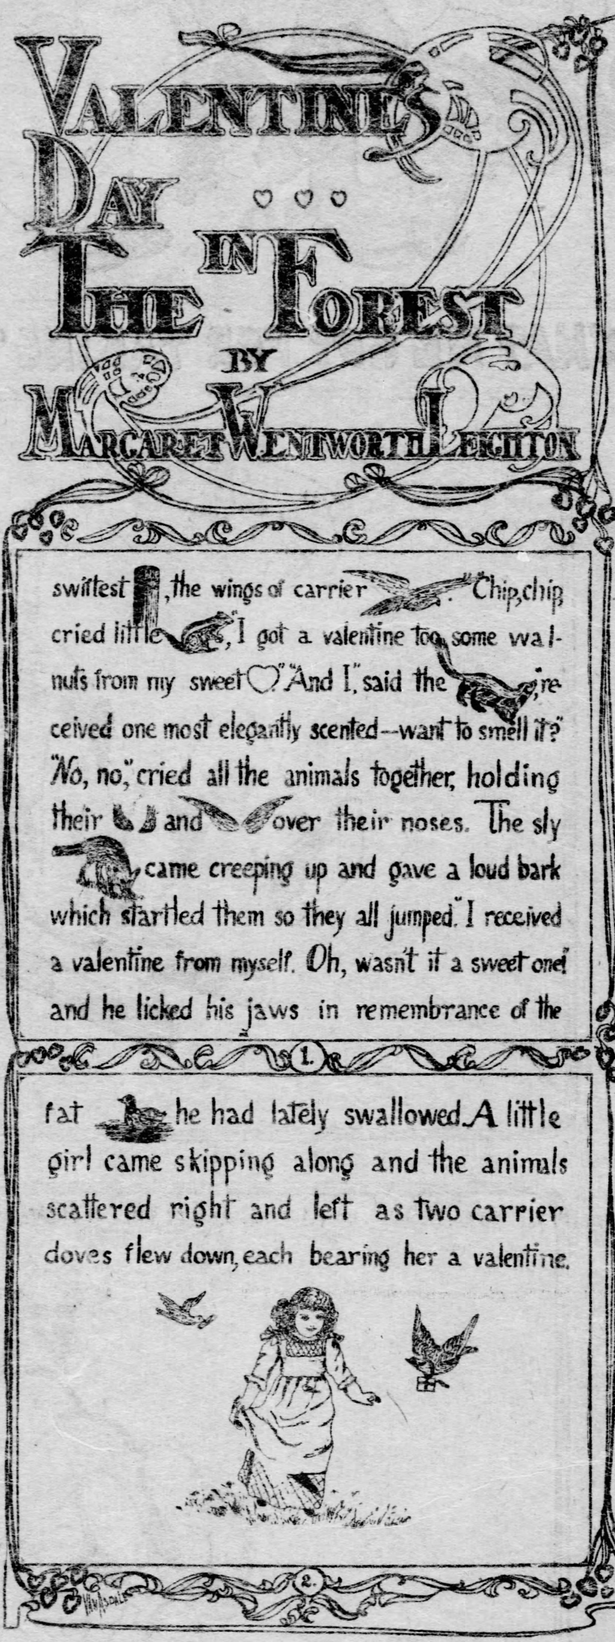
The morning, dear, my valentine,
And your glad eyes upon me;
The stars have all forgot to shine;
The morning, dear, my valentine,
And, oh, your smile to sun me!

The morning, dear, my valentine,
And you to walk beside me;
To eat my bread and drink my wine;
The morning, dear, my valentine,
And still your voice to guide me.

The even, dear, my valentine,
The white night to enfold us,
Your eyes to mirror unto mine;
The even, dear, my valentine,
And God's right arm to hold us!

—Ethel M. Kelley in Smart Set.

"Now Speak to Me."



MOLLY AND ST. VALENTINE

By MABEL CRONISE JONES.

MOLLY was seated at little table, busily engaged in the manufacture of wonderful valentines.

She had a bottle of mucilage, some card board and a pile of highly colored pictures. Her face was smeared; her hands were sticky, but Molly was happy.

A young man glanced into the room. "Where is your mother, Molly? Your father asked me to give her an important message; Simpson thought that she was here."

"She went up to her room, Mr. Archer," Molly said benignly, for the handsome young fellow was a great favorite of hers. "If you will wait a minent I will call her."

"That's a darling girl. May I look at these wonderful valentines while you are gone?"

'Of course you may, but please don't spill the mucilage," Molly said, mindful of the injunctions which she herself had received.

"All right, Molly, I'm much obliged. You have a fine assortment of valentines there. Suppose you add this one to your collection and send it to some one for me." And Archer pulled a dainty missive from his pocket which he had bought that morning from a lame protege of his.

"Oh, how perfectly beautiful, Mr. Archer. May I really send it to some one for you? Don't you want to send it yourself?"

"Oh, no, Molly, you had better do that. You will make sure that it gets to the right person, I know."

Just then Molly's mother came in and Archer forgot all about the matter. Molly, however, considered it a matter of supreme importance. She looked at the card with admiring eyes. It was really very pretty. It was quite a modern valentine, without the lace and tinsel of the old time ones.

On a creamy card was a lovely bit of spring landscape. In the foreground knelt a youth in cavalier attire, begging the lovely damsel whose hand he had seized, to "Bless his life and be his wife." Cupid hovered above their heads with drawn bow.

To whom should she send this lovely valentine? Molly's brows puckered themselves into a fearful frown as she pondered the weighty question.

Suddenly her face cleared. Why, she would give it to Margaret, of course. There was no one else in all the world so pretty and so sweet as Margaret, so she certainly ought to have this beautiful valentine.

Thus it chanced that a little while later a bright face peered into Margaret's room. A creamy envelope was thrust into her lap and Molly turned to flee.

"Oh, did you send me this valentine? How sweet of you, Molly, thank you very much."

"But I did not send it, Margaret, truly. A young man gave it to me for you. Honest, true!"

Margaret paled perceptibly. "You must tell me who it was, Molly—you really must. Mr. Archer was here, I know—was it—was it——"

"Yes, of course, it was Mr. Archer—who else could it be?" and then Molly was off like a flash.

Margaret Ainsworth sat looking at the card in her lap with a multitude of troubled thoughts surging through her brain. If Roy had wished to ask her any such question, why had he taken this way to do it? Was it because she had been rather cold and distant of late? She had been so; she knew it. But it had been the result of shyness. One night he had started to say somthing—she thought she had known what he had intended to say—then a caller had been ushered in. The next time that she saw Archer she had felt self-conscious and embarrassed. That very fact made her seem cold and distant.

He had never tried to resume their interrupted conversation. Had he not wished to do so, or had he been checked by her manner?

She could not quite understand why he had taken such a means as this of asking his question. Had he meant anything, or not?

He would be at their house for dinner that evening. Margaret had heard her father invite him, and she had also heard Archer vainly trying to excuse himself.

She had no very definite thought in her mind when evening came. Molly was positive that Roy had sent the valentine; if so, why she must at least allude to it.

She snatched it up in her hands and went down to the drawing room. Her mother had not yet appeared. She paused before Archer, a trifle shy and confused. "Did you really send me this valentine? Molly said that you did—but—"

Something in her look gave him sudden courage and he was quite enough of a lawyer to take advantage of a situation, even when he failed to comprehend it entirely.

"That valentine is certainly yours. To whom else would I be likely to send it?"

"Then—then—"

And then Archer proved himself quite equal to the occasion by coolly taking her in his arms and inwardly blessing Molly.

And Molly herself received the most gorgeous valentine next day of any child in the city, for it was a perfect mass of gilt Cupids and golden darts.

A ZIG-ZAG.

All the following described words contain the same number of letters. Guess them correctly and place one below the other in the order given, and the zig-zag commencing at the upper left-hand letter will spell the name of the capital of a large empire.

(1) To mark. (2) To deride. (3) To rule. (4) A bird. (5) Indistinct. (6) Supports. (7) A fishing basket. (8) To make amends. (9) An occurrence. (10) Veracity. (11) A man's name. (12) To examine. (13) A native of India. (14) A girl's name. (15) A bet.

Answers to Last Week's Questions.

PUZZLES.

Dropped letter proverbs:

1. He who goes a borrowing goes a sorrowing.
2. Rome was not built in a day.
3. Birds of a feather flock together.
4. All is not gold that glitters.
5. Honesty is the best policy.
6. A stitch in time saves nine.

Letter puzzle:
"All's well that ends well."

Word diamonds:

(A) T / SEA / TENTS / ATE / S

(B) H / HAM / HARRY / MRS / Y

(C) D / TIP / TIARA / DIAMOND / PROUD / AND / D

(D) J / RUN / RAPID / JUPITER / NITRE / DEE / R

An arithmetical enigma—
Seven — Even — Eve.

A queer query—
This is a "sell." The answer is "Letters." In the word "twenty" there are six letters, in the word "six" there are three, and so on.

RIDDLES.

1. Fry-day.
2. One P.
3. Cod-ling.
4. A fountain.

P. S.—Answers to puzzles, etc., and all letters about the column should be sent to Uncle Ned, care of The Gazette. A book will be given as prize each week for the best list of answers.

BITS OF PHILOSOPHY.

Be firm, but not offensive, in your opinions.

Boast not before the contest, nor even afterward.

The sun of prosperity often withers the soul.

Better permit your friends to offer excuses for your faults.

There can never be surfeiting without suffering also.

All men are liable to make mistakes; the wise correct them.

Caution is more nearly related to courage than it is to cowardice.

You need not wait for the opportunity to do good. It is always here.

After you reject the good counsel of your friends you still expect their sympathy.

Uncle Ned's Corner

I PROMISED last week that I would show you how to fashion some pretty cases in which to put the sweets I gave you directions for. I hope you have been successful with them, and that you have got a nice stock ready. You will want some fine cartridge paper, or you can gum some crinkled paper on to firm white paper. First of all, cut out a triangle measuring 8 inches each way, and fold the paper at the dotted lines given in the diagram. On each point stick a colored scrap, or paint or draw in pen and ink some pretty design; if for a present, the name or initials of the person you are giving it to could be added. Join the three triangles together with a tiny bow of baby ribbon, and your little case is quickly made. You will soon find that you can make a great variety of these dainty little cases in color and decoration, and several would look pretty on a table when you have a party.

A Japanese or Geisha Party.

I expect you are finding it rather difficult to get new games to play, and so I am going to tell you how to give a Japanese party, the preparation for which will keep you amused and employed for some time. The costumes for the party will, perhaps, seem rather a trouble, but if you will have a little patience you will soon see how easily they can be made. A gentleman's dressing gown with long sleeves will make a very good Japanese kimono, the name of the Japanese ladies' dress, and it can be made to look pretty if some large flowers are cut out of cretonne or even paper, sewn on lightly, and a bright roll collar laid on. If you have a "dressing up" drawer you must now turn it out, and use everything you can possibly remodel. Art muslin is excellent for the dresses, and if it is to be worn only one evening hardly needs a lining. To make the dress take three widths of the material the length of the girl for whom it is to be made, from the shoulder to the floor, allowing a small hem, and join them together. Fold the two front widths in half and join them along the top to form the shoulder, measure the length of this shoulder seam and cut a slit the same measurement down the fold to form the armhole. Each sleeve takes one width of material, the length of the arm. If you join this you will find that it exactly fits the armhole. Face back the sleeve with a contrasting color, or put a strapping as shown in our sketch, finished with two large, bright buttons at the top.

Slip the dress on and pin a wide box pleat down the back to fit the wearer, put on the roll collar, and hem back the front to show a bright petticoat, which must be made of any colored piece of sateen or other material you have handy. These petticoats are made very narrow, only 1½ yards wide round the bottom hem, so that the wearer cannot walk properly, but only shuffle along in true Japanese fashion, and as only a little piece shows in front it can be made of any material so long as the front piece is bright and pretty. The lady's costume, of course, is not complete without a sash, which is spread out wide and tied up under the arms, forming a big butterfly bow at the back, the loops being pinned up on the shoulders. Each girl should wear a silk handkerchief crossed at the neck under the dress. Japanese fans and umbrellas can be bought for a few pence, and some of the quite tiny ones must be saved for the hair. The hair dressing is a great feature, and it is best for one of the party to be told off to dress all the hair. A glance at a figure or a fan will give an idea of the way it should be done. Large chrysanthemums or roses look well stuck one on either side of the face, above each ear, these could be made of paper. If the heels are taken off some old evening shoes the flat slippers left make excellent footwear, and they can be enameled if too shabby.

Boys' Costumes.

The boys' costumes can be quickly made out of suits of pajamas. Edge the coat with a bright border, turning in the collar, hem up the legs until they reach just below the knee, adding a border. Let the wearer have light brown stockings and a pair of flat slippers tied on like sandals. Make a pagoda-shaped hat out of a fish basket, wiring it at the edge to make it stiff, and tie a long, black pigtail on to it made of ordinary rope, untwisted, plaited and blacked with Brunswick black; a very fair imitation of a coolie is the result. A very grand Japanese can have a skirt to his dress made out of a bright table cloth (an Indian one, if you have it). Fold it at the top to the required length, and wrap it round the boy, securing it with several safety pins. A short coat must be worn with this. I made one with an unmounted embroidered cushion cover for the back and some old pieces of black satin for the narrow fronts and sleeves, and finished off the entire edge with more bright trimming that came off an old evening dress. A large silk handkerchief was folded in front to form the waistcoat, and a sash covered up all joins at the waist. This boy's hair should be brushed straight back off his face, and if you are clever at it you should all make your eyebrows slant upward, with the aid of a black eyebrow pencil, which may be bought of any chemist for 6d.

When the dresses are all made you must decide upon your program, and the way I did it was to turn the schoolroom into a "tea house" by taking out all the furniture possible, leaving, of course, the piano and seats for the guests. In the center of the window was suspended a Japanese lantern, and long trails of creeper, such as ivy, were pinned on to the window curtains with sprays of paper wisteria intermixed. (I will tell you how to make this next week.) Strings of Japanese lanterns lighted the room, and tiny tea tables were placed for the guests. Each geisha girl had a tea tray, and the boys handed cakes, etc. As the guests arrived they were greeted in the correct Japanese mode of salutation; that is, bowing very, very low, and rubbing the outspread hands down the knees, or kneeling down with the palms of the hands and the forehead touching the ground. This causes great fun but requires a little practice to do neatly. After tea is handed to everyone the concert should begin, and songs could be taken from the "Mikado." Three girls singing "Three Little Maids from School," songs and dances from the "Geisha," and such songs as "The Chinese Dolly," by Osmond Carr, and "Oyuchasan," by Meyer Lutz, this latter suiting one of the boys. The performers should group themselves prettily, one or two of the smallest lying on cushions in the front, and everyone joining in the chorus of the songs.

A Coin Puzzle.

Three missionaries, accompanied by three natives, arrive at the bank of a river, which they must cross. The only means of transit is a boat which holds but two people. The missionaries believe that the natives have conspired together to rob and murder them if they can get the upper hand, and it is therefore essential that a single missionary should not be left alone with two natives, or two missionaries with all three natives. How can the crossing be arranged in order to avoid either of these combinations?

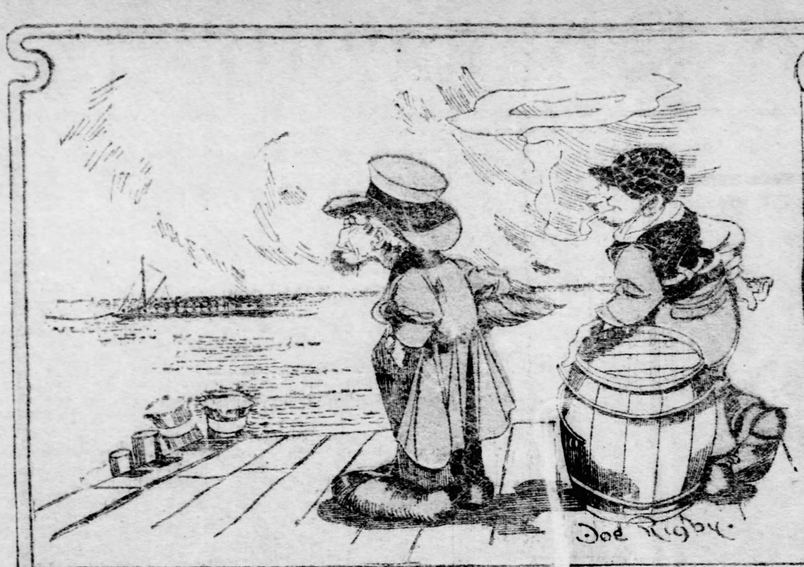
You will find that if you use three pennies to represent the missionaries, and three halfpennies for the natives, that it will be quite easy to find the solution.

BEHEADED WORDS

1. Behead 'to repair' and leave 'complete.'
2. " 'over' and leave 'a symbol.'
3. " 'close' and leave 'a part of your body.'
4. " 'to clamber' and leave 'member.'
5. " 'part of a stocking' and leave 'a fish.'
6. " 'a town' and leave 'a well.'
7. " 'a slice of fish' and leave 'a wood.'
8. " 'faithful' and leave 'rejrist.'
9. " 'to find' and leave 'a emissary.'
10. " 'a grain' and leave 'an animal.'

The first letters of each word taken in order will leave the name of a town in the north of England.

"PETS."



FARMER WAYBACK: "Yer say that it's low tide, and that the tide rises six feet here. Well, by hookie, I am just going to wait here and see it sink that there boat."

HAROLD: "And how do you like going to school, Millie?"
MILLIE: "Pretty well; I like coming home best, though."

YOUNG TWOMBLY: "I am sorry to hear, deaw boy, that you didn't succeed. You must have read a refusal in her face."
YOUNG TWIMBLY: "I did. She 'nit' her brows."

WEEPING WILLIE: "Lady, I'm—sob—thinking about me lost old happy home."
KIND LADY: "Dear me. Well, cry over here, that's Fido's favorite place to sleep in the sun."

In for a good time.

MRS. HOMLEE: "Now, you know I was a poor girl, and yet you tell everybody you married me for my money."
HOMLEE: "What other excuse could I make."

IT'S AN ILL WIND THAT CAN'T BLOW SOMEBODY GOOD.

The Land of the Okapi and the Rhinoceros

By EMMA SHAW COLCLEUGH

ENTEBBE, UGANDA, AFRICA, Dec. 22.—Where is Uganda? This question, often asked, should not excite surprised comment, for, until the preliminary surveys for the so-called Uganda railway brought before the public this section of equatorial Africa, the name Uganda conveyed to the mind of the average reader little save the mention of a country as vague as it was remote.

Africa is in political history at once the oldest and the newest of continents. Although the Egyptian empire has been known for ages, the interior of the African continent may well be said to be as truly a discovery of the 19th century as America was of the 15th and Australia of the 18th. While all the other continents had been divided among the civilized races of the world, Africa had remained almost unknown to Christian nations, "isolated," as one chronicler expresses it, "in her native barbarism, or in the partial civilization introduced by the conquests of Islam."

At the beginning of the 19th century few geographers were possessed of sufficient audacity to represent the African interior upon their maps, by ought save a wide-reaching blank, whereon appeared no hint of the mighty rivers, extensive lakes, and snow-capped mountains, since discovered. Not until three-fourths of that century had passed away did the days of Africa exploration and discovery dawn.

Then came, in swift succession, the awakening of commercial competition and the series of events which resulted in the "Partition of Africa."

In his book upon "Africa in the Nineteenth Century" Edgar Sanderson says: "This partition of Africa, effected in an international rush and scramble without precedent in the history of the world, was caused by a fever of rivalry in commercial affairs, among the great European states, seeking for new markets, when America, Australia, India and the east, had become glutted with the goods manufactured by their people."

The initiative in the work of division has been ascribed to Germany. With this division, the political and diplomatic vocabulary was enriched by a new word and praise, in "Hinterlands" and "Spheres of Influence," or, as the Germans derisively style the latter, "spheres of interest." Whether or not they will, in reality, ever become spheres of interest, is what many a British taxpayer is asking today.

The Reasons Why.

"Why?" they ask, "do we hold Uganda?" "Why expend so many millions to connecting this far-away outpost with the sea?" "Will that railway ever pay?" These and a score more of similar queries are continually forced upon all African officials.

To answer all these would be as obviously an impossibility as it would be to give, in a single article, an adequate description of the Uganda Protectorate—a section of which, according to the late commissioner, contains within an area of some 150,000 square miles, nearly all the wonders, most of the extremes, the most signal beauties and some of the horrors of the Dark Continent. Portions are endowed with the healthiest climate to be found anywhere in tripical Africa, yet there are districts of extreme insalubrity. In this protectorate there are forests of a tropical luxuriance, only to be matched in parts of the Congo Free state, and in the Cameroons. Probably in no other part of Africa are there such vast woods or conifers. There are other districts as hideously desert and void of any form of vegetation as the worst part of the Sahara. There is the largest continuous area of marsh to be met with in any part of Africa, and perhaps also the most considerable area of table land and mountain, rising considerably above 6,000 feet. Here is probably reached the highest point on the whole of the African continent, namely, the loftiest snow peak of the Ruwenzori range. Here is the largest lake in Africa, which gives birth to the main branch of the longest river in the continent. The Protectorate, lying on either side of the equator, contains over a hundred square miles of snow and ice; it also contains a few spots in the relatively low-lying Valley of the Nile, where the average daily heat is perhaps higher than in any other part of Africa.

These contrasts in the physical characteristics are paralleled by those of the people, for within the protectorate boundaries are found specimens of nearly all the marked types of Africans. The naked Nile tribes, the scrupulously clothed Waganda, the Apollo-like Masai and the ape-like Pygmies, all these are represented—peoples whose customs and beliefs differ as widely as do their personal appearance.

Marvels of the Land.

As if to take the lead in wonders, Uganda is the country of the okapi, the whale-headed stork, the chimpanzee and the five-horned giraffe, the rhinoceroses with the longest horns and the elephants with the biggest tusks.

Under these circumstances who wonders that one, summing up the situation, concludes: "Whatever drawbacks may be found in the Uganda Protectorate from the white man's point of view, monotony or lack of interest is not one of them." The official answer to the question, "Where is Uganda?" tells us: Its present limits are as follows: On the north, the fifth degree of north latitude; on the east a line drawn down the middle of Lake Rudolf, and thence southwards to the German frontier; on the south by the German frontier and by the first degree of south latitude, and on the west by the eastern boundary of the Congo Free State. Within these boundaries lie about half of the Victoria Nyanza, part of Lake Albert Edward, nearly all Albert Nyanza, the whole of several smaller lakes, half of Lake Rudolf, and the course of the Nile from its exit from Victoria Nyanza to Lado, where the Egyptian Soudan commences an area, as has been stated elsewhere, of something like 150,000 square miles.

Although interest centers in Uganda proper, as the native kingdom is called, the protectorate includes the districts of Usoga, Toru and Unyoro, Kavirondo and Eldoma having been lately transferred to the East African protectorate.

Of the population of 4,000,000 credited to the protectorate, less than 300 are Europeans.

To the inquiry "Why does England hold Uganda?" there are varied replies. One says, naively: "If England were to withdraw some other European nation would at once take possession, therefore, it follows that an empire like Great Britain, in vigorous growth, had to take over Uganda."

That circumstances sometimes force expansion upon nations that neither look for nor desire it, has, within the last decade, been shown by certain events in our own national history, and, though no one dreams of denying England's natural tendency in that direction, those best informed in regard to her earliest connection with equatorial Africa, attribute the action taken by the imperial government to motives which were neither political nor commercial, but philanthropic.

The Slave Trade.

It has long been a recognized fact that Arab and Swahili traders from the coast were the pioneers in the economic development of Uganda and Eastern Africa, but not all who knew this realized that, of the traffic established by these traders, the slave trade had in some sections a monopoly. Sir Samuel Baker, who went to the middle Nile to hunt and passed thence to the upper Nile to explore, found the country devastated by the slave trade. Realizing as never before the pathos of savage life, he returned to Europe, determined to devote his best energies to the annihilation of the slave trade. "Until this be effected," he said, "there is no opening for missionary enterprise; the country is sealed and closed against all improvement."

It was largely due to the stress laid by Baker, Sir John Kirk and others upon the enormity of the slave trade in Central Africa that the home government suggested a railway from the coast to Uganda. Its ostensible object was to crush the slave trade. It was suggested that yearly subsidy be given to the railway company, with the expectation that once the line was finished it would result in saving the government the large amount which was annually expended in slave bounties and other attempts to put an end to slave raiding.

The political reasons assigned for holding Uganda state that the lands comprised within protective boundaries contain the headwaters of the River Nile, continuing: "The power which holds Uganda—whether European or African—might by means of relative simple engineering works, withhold the main source of the Nile supply from the irrigation of Egypt. It is a disputed point whether the Nile floods, by which Egypt is kept alive, derive their volume equally or disproportionately from the lakes and rivers of Abyssinia, or the lakes and rivers of Uganda. But the Abyssinian source of supply is not under British control, and should any circumstance cause interference with the water supply coming from Abyssinia, it would certainly be necessary that the other contribution from the main source of the Nile should be completely under our control. We take a peculiar interest in the welfare of Egypt because that country is at present such an important stage on the way to India. The maintenance of our control, therefore, over the East African and Uganda protectorates is necessitated by our regard for the political future of India."

An Outlet for India.

Without entering into the necessity, from the English standpoint, that these sections of the Dark Continent furnish a much-needed outlet for Indiana trade, enterprise and emigration, every visitor will naturally begin to consider what resources the country possesses for the development of a profitable trade.

Emerson said: "When the Indian trail gets widened, bridged and graded to a good road, there is a benefactor, there is a missionary, a pacificator, a wealth-bringer, a maker of markets, a vent for industry." What is true of the Indian trail is likely to be in years to come equally true of the old caravan route. Already we see it converted into the benefactor and the pacificator in that a firm rule has suppressed inter-tribal wars, put an end to the wholesale slaughter connected with the deaths of important chiefs, and abolished such customs as beheading one's wife for omitting to close a door, or mutilating a page because he accidentally trod on the tail of a pet dog.

This is recognized by the natives themselves, one of whom, in reply to a query whether they were vexed at the white man's assumption of control, replied with an unmistakable emphasis: "The white man is good; we would do anything for him. Did he not take away Kabarega (the banished king of Unyaro), who for more years than we can remember made our lives too miserable to be borne? We were once a powerful, numerous people. We lived in the plains at the base of the mountains, fearing no one. We had always plenty of food, and we possessed large herds of sheep and goats and some cattle. Kabarega came upon us with his soldiers and they destroyed all we possessed, and killed many of our people, driving the rest into the forests to live without houses and without sheep or goats. We dared not make a fire lest its smoke should draw down on us Kabarega's raiders. They followed us even into our forests and then we had to go and live on the rocks among the white stuff (snow). We should all of us have died, finally, had not the white man taken away Kabarega and brought peace into the land."

As a wealth-bringer, the line should not yet be taken into consideration, although upon the principle, "A penny saved is a penny earned," its earnings have already been considerable. It goes without saying that the bulk of freight has so far been from the seaboard to the interior, but there is little reason to doubt that large consignments of ivory, hides, horns, rubber, acacia gums, shellac, ebony and other products will soon be shipped to the seaboard.

The Wealth of the Forests.

A market for the limitless timber supply in certain sections of Uganda, as well as from the forest plateau at the Man Escarpment, should be found in East Africa, where, at present, nearly all the timber for building purposes has to be imported either from Norway or Canada. Sugarcane grows most abundantly on the coast of Victoria Nyanza and in the Nile countries, coffee grows wild in certain parts of the protectorate and experts express the opinion that it might be cultivated with success and at a profit. In this connection are also mentioned cocoa, vanilla and tea. Cotton and indigo both grow wild and there is no end of fiber plants. From these and the leaves of the date palm, and various plant grasses, beautifully made mats, remarkable for their durability, softness and artistic skill are manufactured in Uganda. Admirable baskets are also made, some of which would excite the admiration and envy of American students of basketry. Could the Waganda be induced to manufacture these in quantity there would be no difficulty in finding vent for this particular branch of native industry. They have, however, little idea of work, except as it is needed to provide for immediate wants. If a food basket is lacking or a mat gets destroyed the women will make others to replace them, but one tries in vain to induce a Uganda to make any utensil to order.

To return to Uganda's vegetable productions, especial mention should be made of India rubber. In his official report, Sir Harry Johnston says: "About one-fifth of the area of the Uganda Protectorate is covered more or less densely with rubber-producing trees and vines, principally belonging to the Apocynaceous order. There is said also to be a species of real gutta percha tree, but of this I have no certain proof. The rubber derived from the above-mentioned sources is of very good quality, and the samples which we have submitted to examination on the east coast of Africa and at Kew, though not quite properly prepared have fetched from 2s to 3s per pound." Continuing, he speaks with great confidence in regard to the wide area covered with rubber-producing trees, and emphasizes the average value of the rubber, adding: "When I first arrived in Uganda I found the natives totally ignorant of the resources of their forests. They valued the rubber vines chiefly for their edible fruit." Mr. Whyte, the director of the scientific and agricultural departments, took up the matter and the Waganda chiefs, once informed of the value of the rubber industry, sent young men to be instructed by Mr. Whyte in the methods of procuring the rubber from the tree or vine without injury to the source of supply.

Teaching the Natives.

"We endeavor," said Mr. Whyte, "to impress it upon the natives that if the trees are properly dealt with they will furnish a continual revenue." Before entering upon this course of instruction such an agreement was made with the chiefs as brought all the forests directly under the crown. It then became illegal for anyone to gather rubber in the forests without permission, but the chiefs were informed by the commissioner that until further notice no restriction would be placed upon any native desiring to collect rubber from the government forests, provided they followed, in such collection, the rules taught by Mr. Whyte. The government profit comes in through the establishment of a 15 per cent ad valorem duty on all rubber exported. It is a surprise to each visitor to Uganda to note the attention paid to the cultivation of the soil. Wheat, oats and barley grow well in some sections. Indian corn everywhere, tomatoes grow wild and yield enormously. European vegetables, sweet potatoes and ground nuts of different kinds do well, as do many varieties of fruit.

The food of the people consists largely of bananas, sweet potatoes and pounded maize. As regards wealth in animal products, first place is, of course, given to ivory, for which equatorial Africa has long been a recognized center.

Ostrich farms might easily be started in the eastern part of the protectorate, where the ostrich is now very common. It belongs to the North African species and has especially fine plumes.

Uganda is fairly well supplied with fine cattle, and has enormous herds of sheep and goats. It is suggested that an effort be made to domesticate the zebra in Uganda, as the Germans have done quite successfully in German East Africa. This industry has not yet passed beyond the experimental stage.

To claim possibilities for great wealth in the line of minerals would be to accept only hearsay evidence.

Critics of the Hut Tax.

Some criticize the small hut-tax laid upon each individual, forgetting that it is scarcely a tithe of the enforced tribute paid to chiefs in olden days. The system of paid labor came but gradually into force, owing to the chiefs, who prevented their peasants from accepting the paid labor offered by the government. When, finally, a few applied for work, and found that they were allowed to keep what they earned, more and more came forward, and now there are scores of applicants.

During the first year that the taxation was in vogue, payment was mostly made in labor, but it is expected that now that the people are beginning to receive cash, the revenue from the hut and gun taxes, with customs duties, licenses and other taxes from Europeans, the local revenue will in time amount to a sum sufficient to meet the cost of the local administration. Altogether, it is thought that there is room for hope that since the sword is being so rapidly turned into the ploughshare that this great land will, by the wealth of its products and the mart which it will offer to the manufactured articles from Europe and America, justify the expectations of those who urged the English government to bring it within the "British sphere of influence."

Lugard, to whose energy is largely due England's possession of the country, prophesies that Uganda, "from its geographical position, the intelligence of its people, and its progress in civilization and Christianity, must form the key to Central Africa," and adds that it will soon take its place as one of the most progressive and valuable of the outlying dependencies of the British empire. Equally sanguine is the late commissioner, who says: "In my opinion the Uganda protectorate will not only justify and redeem in the future the money expended on its creation and development, but will further console us for similar expenditure on the less richly endowed protectorate of East Africa."

O'CONNOR'S TIGHT CORNER

A Lone Irishman's Desperate Fight Against Kaffir Hordes Armed With Dynamite.

THE MURDER of a native policeman on Friday, March 29, 1896, was the first sign of that disastrous outbreak of South African natives when the Matabele went on the war path under their chief Umzobo, and many hundreds of British subjects, men, women and children, were horribly massacred and mutilated before the forces of the Chartered Company, under Cecil Rhodes' lieutenant, Dr. Jameson, quelled them into submission and exacted a stern retribution.

Four days later three miners were quietly munching their breakfast in their little tin shanty on a "digging" some 50 miles from Bulawayo. They were oblivious of the rebellion which was now raging at no great distance from them, and which, like a bush fire, was being fanned into flame by native passion and savage lust of blood throughout Rhodesia. Two of the miners, Ottens and Ivers, having finished their meal, strode out and rode away to an outlying district on business, leaving their comrade alone.

This was an Irishman named Joe O'Connor, a stalwart, muscular man, hard-headed, hard-listed, stout-hearted, one of the finest specimens of those Celts who have always been among the best fighting men of the empire.

A Dozen Black Devils.

Whistling quietly to himself the miner kneaded a loaf of bread for his lunch and set it outside in the sun to rise. Then he returned, and sitting on a locker had a pipe before going down the mine. For a few minutes he dozed off, but was startled into wakefulness by the sudden barking of his two dogs, Snowball and Captain. With that alertness which only comes from a life where danger is no rare thing, O'Connor sprang to his feet, and at a glance was aware of a Kaffir advancing towards the open door of the hut with a gun in his hand. Before O'Connor could stir a dozen dark forms joined the first comer, and the Irishman realized in the blink of an eyelid that they meant murder.

Paralyzed into momentary terror he cowered back in the vain hope of encroaching himself in the hut, but the yell that came from a dozen hoarse throats as the Kaffirs brandished their knob-kerries and advanced upon him brought the blood back to his heart and brain, and he felt that tingling down the spine which stiffens a man who means to sell his life dearly.

O'Connor, being an Irishman, had not passed half a lifetime without giving and receiving some hard knocks. In "the auld country" he had often taken part in a rough-and-tumble fight, where his enemies had tasted the weight of his fists, and in his everyday work in the mines all the muscles of his body had been hardened into the temper and flexibility of fine springs. His training stood him in good stead now that he faced foes who would give no quarter.

Repulsed by His Iron Fists.

With a sudden bound he sprang into the midst of them, scattering them with his iron fists, which struck out like sledge hammers. Two of the foremost Kaffirs fell like ninepins, and for a moment the others fell back. But it was only while he could draw breath. Then with fiendish cries they rushed at him and a hail of blows from the kerries battered his head and body. O'Connor, with set teeth and flaming eyes received them as if they had been but feathers. Grasping a knob-kerry in each hand he wrenched them from his opponents' grasp, and brandishing them round his head, struck another to the ground so that he lay like a felled ox, grunting horribly.

The odds, however, were against him. A frightful blow smashed into his face, half blinding him, and while he wavered two of the Kaffirs followed this up by devilish strokes, which made his ribs crack, and beat him into a bloody mass of bruises.

O'Connor fought a gallant retreat toward the mouth of the shaft. Beaten to his knees, but struggling up again, striking madly with the splintered sticks which were all his weapons, staggering and ever reeling with those black murderous devils on top of him, he reached the entrance to the shaft. The Kaffirs fell back a little, fearful of tumbling into the yawning chasm, and several of them yelled out the words "n injani wena al pesa?" (Why don't you shoot the man?)

These cries were addressed to the Kaffir who was armed with the gun, and who had not yet fired, probably because he was afraid of wounding his comrades. But now that O'Connor stood alone, gasping for breath, and wiping the blood from his eyes, the nigger shot once, twice, and yet again, but with such wretched aim that each bullet went wide of the mark.

From Frying Pan Into Fire.

O'Connor, with an audacity that was wholly heroic, and not without genius, fell backwards designedly into the shaft, and rolled to the very bottom of the slanting tunnel, "like a football," as he afterward described it.

Here one would have thought he deserved to be safe, but it was tumbling from the frying pan into the fire. A gang of his own "boys"—niggers of all races—sprang at him with their mining tools, and the marvel is that he lived to tell the tale. But O'Connor had the courage of a lion, and in spite of his wounds and previous exertions, he made such a good fight with rocks and stones that his assailants—cowardly wretches, it is true—fled up the slanting shaft.

O'Connor now had a breathing time, and thought he had routed his enemies effectually. However, before long, as he lay behind a ledge of rock, he was aware of four Kaffirs approaching, armed with guns. They were "boys" who had been in his employ, and he called out to them to know why they, whom he had always paid well and treated fairly, should desire to kill him. With sullen passion, though with the half-abashed air of the slave before a master, they told him that the black men had risen throughout Rhodesia, that every white man was to be slain, and that he was one of them. Still O'Connor parleyed with them until a sudden alarm sent them scuttling up the shaft again without firing a shot.

Used Dynamite Against Him.

O'Connor breathed a prayer for rescue, but he was doomed to disappointment, and it was not long before he was aware that his enemies had a new plot on hand.

They had managed to possess themselves of the dynamite used for blasting the rock, and now, with frenzied shouts of triumph, they hurled several charges with short fuses to the bottom of the shaft. As it exploded with terrific noise O'Connor was battered with a shower of stones that bruised and cut him horribly. But they did no further damage, for loose dynamite has not anything like the awful effect of dynamite when it is confined.

This little game was kept up for a while, and O'Connor gave himself up for lost, as each explosion seemed to bring the mine about his ears. But by a miracle almost he remained unharmed, except for the cuts and contusions, and at length, the Kaffirs believing him to be a mere lifeless pulp, went off in a body to wreak their lust of blood elsewhere.

For many hours Joe O'Connor remained in his hiding place, and then, when the moon shone down the shaft, he staggered up and stood upon the ground, searching with anxious eyes for any signs of friend or foe. But all was silent and deserted. Every hut in the neighborhood had been wrecked, and all around was desolation.

Five Days' Journey to Safety.

With despair in his heart O'Connor set out on a tramp to Nelson's camp, a mile and a half way. At last he got there, weak and exhausted, only to find that this, too, was a wilderness. But here he found water, and it saved his life. Quenching his raging thirst, he next plunged into the stream by Edkin's store, "wallowing in it," as he said, "like a boar," and bathing his wounds in its refreshing and cleansing waters.

Feeling somewhat restored, though still weak, he set out once more, turning his steps toward Bulawayo. For two nights and a day he struggled on through the awful solitude. His wounds opened afresh, he was faint with hunger and loss of blood, his head was dizzy, and his brain full of horrid imaginings and vain terrors.

Staggering and tottering, sometimes falling, but always with indomitable spirit picking himself up and pushing onward, he continued this journey of physical torture until, after 120 hours, he reached Dawson's store on the Umzingwani river.

Two men, friends of his, named Judge and Schulz, saw him coming, and ran to meet this terrible-looking, half-naked and blood-stained man, whose hair had blanched, who was bruised almost out of human likeness, and who seemed in the very agony of a walking death. Until he spoke they knew him not, and then, as with a cry they recognized him, he fell swooning at their feet.

This heroic Irishman recovered speedily in Bulawayo hospital, and told his story simply and straightforwardly, as here set down. Pathetic is it, and lamentable, that though he escaped in this strange and wonderful manner he died by the very hand of nature only two years later. In a summer thunderstorm he was struck by lightning as he sat at his cottage door, and this one bright flash of steel-blue light withered into lifelessness that brave fellow whom the murderous gang of blacks had failed to subdue.

ST. VALENTINE'S PRETTY EMBLEMS

"The Queen of Hearts."

IMP IN THE BOTTLE

Written for The Sunday Gazette by HORACE SEYMOUR KELLER.

"THIS message in a bottle business should be called in and put in cold storage. Really, the poor thing has been worked overtime, and the affair is wobbly, piebald and nutty, not to say ancient. The novelist has worn the thing cribbare, not to mention threadbare; it should back to the sea."

"But it was tossed overboard off the Cape Verd islands and found its way to Boston——"

"Which it didn't do anything of the sort if you will study up your marine map and take notice of the current of the briny deep. The bottle couldn't drift into Boston any more than it could drift into Cairo, Ill. About once in so often we are jerked up to the high point of enthusiasm and pinned down to rapturous horror by this message in the bottle telling us all about the affairs of woe aboard some raft in the Indian ocean. The bottle always fetches up in the immediate vicinity of a summer resort, where a clever chap connected with the press is playing high-low-Jack-and-the-game with his brain and giving his stomach and the public in general a needed rest. But he cannot resist the temptation of springing a few floating bottle or sea serpent just to keep his fist in working order."

"Then you don't take much stock in the message in the bottle business?"

"On the contrary, I believe the whole thing, the entire bottling establishment from the basement where the bottle is filled, up to the floor where the bottle is corked and the pretty label pasted on. Once I had something to do with putting a message in a bottle. I've never forgotten it." The speaker leaned his head upon his hand and sighed wearily as he hitched about in his chair.

"Ah! You've had some experience then about the message in the bottle?"

"Young man, I have." He relapsed into silence as he gazed out of the window and whistled a soft refrain under his mustache. Then he pulled himself together, turned to the others and said dreamily, as though recalling something out of the misty days of childhood:

"When I was a kid I lived in the country; barefoot days, shady lane, cows coming to the barnyard in the gloaming, bark of the watch dog and all that sort of thing, you know. Also up with the hens and to bed when the pullets go to the perch, stubtoe work behind the plow, grinding fodder and turning the grindstone and trailing the milk cans to the factory; also sprouting the potatoes and onions in the cellar, weeding the garden and playing tag with the sheep during shearing season; also splitting the strenuous hemlock knot and handling the frosty handle of a pitch fork early in the a. m. with the merk 20 below—and breaking the ice in the creek for the cattle two miles from home. And some other things taken together which I wouldn't forget for Vanderbilt's pile."

"What's that all to do about the message in the bottle?"

"That's coming right along. Just below the bridge was a shallow eddy, where the sheep were washed. Just above the bridge was the mill dam, under whose apron we went in swimming. It was a nice deep place and we went there every night for a plunge. It was a pretty stream—I can see it yet with the willows, the grist mill and—but never mind. Everything from up stream floated into the eddy and circled around there for days, or until the water got high and carried the stuff down stream. One night a fresh young kid, who was from the city, and I, went for a swim. My old dog Jack went along with me as usual. After our swim the city kid proposed that he and I light out, go west and scalp Indians. At first I did not take kindly to the proposition; but he said we'd win fame and fortune and come back with bags of gold hanging about our necks. I wavered—and finally fell. Then he said in a whisper:

"'Your dad's going to wash sheep down in the eddy tomorrow. Let's send him a message that we have gone away to scalp red skins.'

"The mystery of it all touched me to the quick, and I asked him how we would send the message. He pulled a bottle out of his pocket, tore a leaf from a note-book and scribbled a few words upon it:

"'Jimmy has gone to scalp Indians. He'll come back. Love to all.' He rolled up the bit of paper, put it in the bottle and corked the thing. "It will sail down the stream until it reaches the eddy where your father is going to wash sheep tomorrow. He'll see it sailing around with the stuff, haul it out—and won't that be a joke, see?"

"B—but he'll feel bad, and ma and the girls will cry——"

"Rats! you are no hero. Ten years from now you'll come back with bags of gold and fame. I know all about those things. Haven't I read dead loads of about how boys go west, scalp redskins, find caves full of gold and get rich."

"B—but, what about him—Jack, you know—the dog?" I feebly asked as I laid my hand upon the faithful old fellow's head.

"Send him home. Dogs are no good on the plains."

"Go home, Jack," I said, with a sob. He licked my hand and gazed up into my eyes and slunk away.

"Now we are off for the plains, Coma, we must be going—hist! Is that the footfall of a redskin? Careful, pard; we're in dangerous parts, and the breaking of a twig may lead us to the stake. Bend low and follow me toward yon blazed pine, and all may be well yet. We may reach the Indian village in time to save the fair-skinned daughter of the richest man in Arizona. If we save her we shall both be silver-plated heroes with spurs on our heels and loads of gold dust in our belts." And with a lot more of the same sort of blood-curdling remarks he led the way from the dear old swimming-place. My heart felt like lead and my eyes were cataracts of water. I was leaving home behind—and that accursed message of the bottle. I followed him slowly to the clump of willows just above the bridge.

"A bold dash and victory is—Jimmineddy!" he yelled as he dashed into the road and felt the sting of a well-plied horsewhip. He gave a scream and ran like a deer.

"You next, son, come on. Pa is waiting to say good-by."

I came out quietly and took my dose. Then I went home and hugged Jack, the good old dog who had jumped into the creek, grabbed the bottle and carried it to my home. Father had anticipated my departure. Bottle messages? Don't talk!"

THE BATTLE ON THE SHORE

In Which We Put to Sea, and My Good Friend Dulin Loses Interest in a Losing Game.

By WILL LEVINGTON COMFORT.

(Copyright, 1903, by Will Levington Comfort.)
(Written for The Sunday Gazette.)

WE WERE hiding in the mountains with our faces turned toward the west coast of Honduragua. Hopes of conquest gone, and hopes of personal safety were just flickering. We were white men—a desolate few—harried, wounded, despairing, so far mysteriously immune to death.

Six weeks before, when I encountered Dulin's command at Fort Hatapo, I had watched in action nearly 200 Incorrigibles (to the last man our native force had deserted), and only 30 of the 200 were now on their feet. We were carrying 30 wounded. In regard to the remaining ones the Master of Services only knows. And Dulin—the chief and heart of our resistance—was one of the carried ones.

We were five days, at least, from Santa Anna, the coast city of our aim; and for that period of time we carried but one-fifth of the usual rations.

One thought comes back to me now, though I was too spent and terrorized to engage it at the time. In the midst of overwhelming odds and gigantic obstacles—no white flag was unbared by our command. Hungering, athirst, hampered by the fallen giants, dodging day and night the triumphant lines of Jose Madruga's force—the command held its face to the Pacific, fanned the dying embers of hope and struggled on. To live through such a flight is a radiant destiny; to be permitted to watch and partake in that struggle to the coast, and preserve such details for memory, is a thrilling honor. I look back with joy now, but at the time, each passing moment was an interval of horror.

With Dulin wounded I could find no hope. I was afraid—scornful with tears for my puny, insignificant self—unhispired by the silent eloquence of martyrdom on every side. * * * At the end of the fourth day, after our rout at Buena Ventura, we were hiding in a high jungle, awaiting darkness that we might crawl forward. The men were eating rinds of raw bacon and chewing coffee berries, because fires would lead the enemy against us. The rum had gone out of the Incorrigibles and left the irritation and depression of fever. They grumbled huskily and there was a world of despair in the mutterings. The voice of Dulin reached me:

"Do you know what I'm goin' to do?"

His form lay below, but I could not see him for the darkness. "Tell me, old pal," I said, gently.

"I'm goin' to throw this bum leg over a pony when we take up the steal, an' I'm goin' to keep it there—without bein' held. I'm through bein' carried."

"You've been carried four days, Dulin," said I, "and I've seen men carried four months with a hole in the thigh, no worse than yours."

A little later we took up the flight and I helped Dulin upon a mount. I heard no sound from him, nor could I see the whiteness of his face; yet I was sickened by his suffering.

During the night's work I came abreast of Nicholas Stembridge. "Dulin is in the saddle—in command," I whispered.

"Yes, Dulin is in command, and if it were my way he would be in a cool place with a woman attending, and I—" He paused oddly.

"Yes," said I softly.

"And I'd like to be there fanning him."

I heard the revolutionist breathing hard.

* * * Many times men had told me that Nicholas Stembridge was a soulless promoter, and I had believed.

* * * * * * *

That crawl to the sea—40 ragged, fevered, starving fighters, far from the eyes of the world—led by Dulin, who was half-mad with weakness and pain from a suppurating wound—deserves a better place than the rank of an episode in the extraordinary history of Honduragua. Indeed, were the chronicler's hand a stronger one than mine, that crawl to the sea would take its place among the almost superhuman dramas of our history-making days. And yet it is not of our history, merely a melancholy achievement of white man in an alien land and for alien causes.

I saw our dozen poples, staggering, each under the weight of two wounded; the latter sitting erect sometimes, their haggard, unshaven, blood-stained faces at once a spur to us and a grief. I saw the fever-stricken support the fever-stricken and lead the mounts of the wounded. I saw the drawn face, white lips and staring eyes of Dulin turn from the jungle densities to the train in his agony, and heard his husky voice vent now and then a word of cheer. I saw Nicholas Stembridge move from man to man helping, holding, but I did not see him eat. Day and night, day and night, until the words rang in my dreams and waking thoughts, I heard some guttural voice mutter: "Jake's all in, sir," or "Jimmy here's gone out at last." And we would stop to cover him in the jungle, not very deeply, but the best we could. I saw men drop upon the soggy trail at dawn and cry for meat—saw each phase, from irritation and langour to theft and murder, of the hungry tragedy. And who did not hear at intervals the guns of Jose Madruga, from whom we hid and fled? Yet there was no white flag.

* * * * * * *

As the tenth day was dawning we reached the bluffs and saw a down-trail winding gloomily—at the base, Santa Anna, its roofs shining like gray pieces of silk in the half-light—and beyond, the Pacific! Balboa, with the eyes of achievement, did not gaze upon that, the grandest of earth distances, with mightier passion. Though Jose Madruga had not forsaken us, a cheer broke from our half-dead command, for the men saw the end of the journey. Far off, as daylight triumphed, our eyes beheld a ship, gleaming white, far at sea. And her prow was pointed shoreward.

For the first time in the whole 10 days we chanced an open trail in daylight, but the command was not to be held, with the sea and the ship in view. As we emerged into the open and struck the down-grade to the sea, we heard the baying of Jose Madruga's hundreds, a sound like wolves on a fresh scent.

"We'll get down into the town before the boat!" I shouted to Dulin as I ran beside his pony, "and Madruga is after us—and then what will happen?"

"We'll make a stand," grated Dulin's voice. "And we're not down yet."

Though I knew by experience the deceptive distance of a descent, the thought had not occurred to me. Or we phrased, however, men and horses, panting with a sound of ancient machinery. Occasionally a harmless volley rattled after us.

"Maybe we can find boats on the shore and push out to the ship at once," said Stembridge.

"We'll have to make a stand, anyway," Dulin said.

Ah, Dulin, you knew many things well, but a charge and a stand, best of all!

Two hours to reach the sea; and the van of the defenders, fresh and well-mounted, gained upon us. One of our ponies fell, and in replacing the wounded, time was lost. Two small boats lay beached at the city's edge, but these would not hold one-third of our number, and it was all or none with Stembridge. The ship was leisurely dropping anchor a mile out from shore. We waived frantically, but the activity of the sailors did not seem to be accelerated. Frequenting steamers were used to the extraordinary in Honduraguan stops, and took little trouble to understand our dreadful need. Meanwhile we formed behind a half-ruined wall at the edge of the sea, placed our wounded in a sheltered place and with an average of 15 rounds of ammunition per man, lay belly-down at the extremities of our fortress, resolving to make each cartridge count.

Dulin did not leave the saddle. I offered to help him down. He beckoned me away, laughing.

"It's the last fight in Honduragua," he said, "the last fight in God knows when!"

I did not like the way he spoke, nor the reckless look upon his wasted face.

"They're unloading boxes from the ship out yonder," announced Stembridge, "it's the ammunition we waited for so long!"

For an instant I truly believe that a ray of hope illumined the iron hearts of the command—that they harbored seriously the thought of victory, with renewed ammunition, over the fifty to one odds of the defenders. And Dulin rode out from behind our wall, utterly mad, he seemed to be. Death from the forming command of the enemy sang in his ears.

"Come back, Dulin!" I called.

For a minute he halted in the open, holding his jagged pony still and gaping up at the rows of white smoke plumes. My good friend was different. The thought, and it was an icy one, grew upon me that he was weary—his bad wound, his first defeat, his memories of a woman and a little house and a civilian job in Honolulu, maybe the sting of constant flight from an cowardly sun-darkened band! He sat there motionless upon his mount in the killing fire, and I thought of his old master, Lawton, standing in the rain upon the banks of the San Mateo in Luzon.

"Come back, Dulin," I called again.

Who cares for that last battle in the town of Santa Anna? Those who have followed with Dulin and Stembridge the brief campaign in Honduragua have watched actions from coast to coast. There was little of the tremendously new. Jose Medruga gathered his big force together above us leisurely but invincibly. Meanwhile, out by the ship, three small boats were loaded with heavy boxes and started shoreward in spite of the existing turmoil. Our first hope was that the sailors would not lose heart and turn back: our second, that we might hold out till the boats reached us.

The boats were a quarter of a mile away, but the breeze was coming in, and we could not make them hear. The fire from the defenders was raging hotter each instant. Medruga had strung his men along the water's edge on each side of our wall, and was raking us with his fire.

"Man one of the small boats—two or three of you men," commanded Stembridge, "and paddle out to the others with what wounded you can. Tell 'em out there that we're Americans, and that we're all in."

The order was quickly obeyed.

The day was rising with fiercer heat. With gun metal bursting hot and the treacherous shimmer of the heat rays between our sights and the enemy, our execution could not have been great, but the incorrigibles fought for their lives. * * * The little boat had reached the fleet from the steamer. There was a moment's hesitation which we glanced at with sinking hearts—then all four boats headed for the shore.

"Hol' the devils!" yelled Dulin.

But it was not his old voice which I heard—a weaker, harsher voice. When the boats were a hundred yards away, Stembridge ran to the beach shouting:

"I'm Stembridge. Those boxes are mine and paid for. Throw some of 'em over to make way for the wounded and the rest of us. Can we wade out that far?"

"Yes, we'll get you. Come out," was the answer.

Carrying the wounded we sprang into the water. I stood beside Stembridge. Dulin was riding up and down the beach.

"For God's sake, Dulin, make for the boats," Stembridge yelled.

The rest of us were in the water. Stembridge ran back, I following. * * * Dulin was leaning forward upon the mane of the pony.

We pulled him down, placed him in the last boat on the shore and pushed it out toward the others, the pony following, trembling and snorting. * * * Within an hour those of us who still lived were lifted over the steamer's side, and we saw that Jose Madruga had obtained boats from somewhere and was pottering over the place where the ammunition had been dropped into the harbor.

* * * * * * *

Beyond the name of the ship, "Quito," that she was an American merchant from New York to South American ports, and that Stembridge had secured passage for all, I learned nothing that night, nor cared anything. * * * They carried Dulin to a little stateroom and I sat beside him. Toward midnight he opened his eyes. I placed my ear close to his lips.

"Hello, Kid," I heard. * * * I'm goin' out. It's—all—right, Kid. * * * So-long, Kid."

A little later, Stembridge, who had been standing at the door, entered—placed his hand upon my shoulder. * * * And this is the end of a fragmentary chronicle of one of the innumerable Honduraguan revolutions.

Poinsby's Best Joke

H. S. KELLER.

POINSBY—that isn't his name—but it's a good enough one for the occasion, had been hammering away at the comic papers for two years—without avail. It made him green and sour with envy when he read the poor, stale things they had the nerve to print, at the same time expect people to read and call it fun. In the barber shop he threw a fit every time a patient waiter read a dense joke or some little article; but as all things go in the barber shop when one waits, he was silent—but wrathful. On his way downtown a bosom friend would crack what he called a good thing; for instance:

"I read a rattling good thing in the Mars Flutter last night which I will give to you, as you are a joker. Here it is: Why is a candle like a man who is full? No, that's not it; I mean, why is a drunken candle like—great Scott! I've lost it—no, here you are all o. k. Why is a full candle like a drunken—thunder! Oh, rats! Buy a Mars and read the confounded thing yourself; here's my corner."

"A pack of fools, all of them; think they see the point of a joke when it's dished up to them by one of the funny papers; if I throw them a joke they put baled hay in their ears, shavings in their hats and sawdust in their shoes. They are a whole pack of idiots, all of them. Here I have been giving them real good stuff, and they don't know enough to appreciate it."

When Poinsby reached his office he sat down and dashed off 20 or 30 jokes, little couplets and nice things of a high degree, and sent them to the Mars Flutter. Then he went about his business like a sane man and forgot all about the matter till he got a letter from the editor:

Dear Poinsby: Your bunch of jokes at hand; sorry but we are full to the muzzle; return the jokes; also inclose you our check for two for your clever item—"If the jokes fit you'll never write another." Good boy. Keep it up. We have more on our list like you. It pays not to joke.

TO A PRETTY VIOLINIST.

Dear Lady, in my dreams last night,
Once more, I seemed to hear
Hungarian dances, gay and light,
The Swan-song, faint and clear.

Once more, I lingered willingly
Where Suwanee river flows;
Again, I caught the melody
Of Summer's last fair rose.

Oh, would I were a violin,
To be entreated so!
And, surely, it would be no sin
To wish myself your beau!

THE BOUND OF THE BASKET BALL

With Sufficient Apologies

By HOWARD MARKLE HOKE.

(Written for The Sunday Gazette.)

"SWATSON," said my friend, Doorlock Combs, as we smoked our Indian pipes in his apartments in Butcher street, "there is a man coming up the stairs."

"How do you know that?" I asked. "I don't hear any footsteps."

"The chandelier is vibrating 15 times to the minute. If it were 14, a woman would be coming."

While I was still expressing my wonder, a rap sounded, and a young man answered Combs' invitation to come in. He was about 30, and much perturbed.

"Mr. Combs," he began, after preliminaries, "you may have heard of the strange death of my father, Lord Awfulmoor."

"I have," Combs replied, indifferently. "He was found in the area of the manor at 9:13 on the evening of April 15. He was lying face downward, and when turned over he was seen to have been frightened to death. A line of footsteps in the moist ground, showing just the point of the toe, proved that he had run a considerable distance at the top of his speed."

"Marvelous memory!" Lord Awfulmoor admitted. "I came to tell you, sir, that my great grandfather died of heart failure in a game of basketball. It was in the last game of a bitterly-contested international series. The ball came toward him at a critical point in the game. It took an unexpected bound, and in the fear that he would not receive it properly he died on the spot.

"My grandfather was a posthumous child, and all through his life was mortally afraid of anything that looked like a sphere. He died at last in terror upon seeing the full moon over his left shoulder. My poor father inherited this form of fear, but in his case the malady was aggravated. He was not only afraid of material spheres, but he imagined all kinds of hideous ones flying through the air. There was one that he often described to me as being appalling. It was a basketball that emitted brilliant light from the eyes, nose and mouth of a hideous face. He never went out at night for fear of it, but on the night of his death he was compelled to venture out on urgent business, and was overtaken by the terrible apparition. He often told me that he did not mind it to a dangerous extent as long as it was flying straight through the air, but he said if it should ever strike the earth and bound toward him he would die of fright. I have no doubt, sir, that he imagined it taking that bound on the ninth of his death."

"This is interesting, Lord Awfulmoor," Combs commented, "but it is psychological. You should consult a specialist on mental aberration."

"I would if I felt the slightest trace of inheriting this fear, but I do not. I have just hurried home from the American plains to come into the possession of Awfulmoor manor. But, sir, upon arriving at my hotel I found this awaiting me." He produced a sheet of paper, upon which were pasted printed words as follows:

"As you value your life don't go to Awfulmoor manor."

"Ha! ha!" cried Combs, and I knew by that "Ha! Ha!" that he was interested. "Now we are approaching the material. But what a blunder! All the words, as you see, are printed but the 'to,' and from the scratching it is plain it was written with a hotel or boarding house pen. The words are cut from a joke that appeared on the lower left-hand corner of page 19 of an American almanac, published 21 years ago. All the words, as you will see, are common ones, but the 'to,' and the man who has warned you was compelled to write that one."

He sprang up quickly and rang a call bell. A boy soon appeared.

"Here is a bag of shillings," Combs told him. "Run around to all the hotels and boarding houses in the United Kingdom and examine the waste paper baskets for a mutilated copy of an American almanac of the year 1880. Wire me at once whether you find it or not. Go on, sir."

"Astonishing system!" cried Lord Awfulmoor. "I will go on, sir, to something even more important. When I got up this morning my suspenders were gone, stolen from my room, and all search for them has been in vain."

"Your suspenders?" I asked.

"Ha! ha!" Combs ejaculated; and I knew by that "Ha! ha!" he had found a clue. "We have at last reached the real Swatson, we are pitted against a villain this time that will try us to the utmost. But we will land him. You must go at once to your manor, Lord Awfulmoor, and you go with him, my dear Swatson. Do not leave him for an instant until I come. I would go with you, but, as you know, Swatson, I am just about to unravel the mystery of the Tampered Mustard Bottle."

Lord Awfulmoor and I reached his manor the next morning. As soon as I looked upon the ancient building I reached for Combs' work on "Glooms," without which I never travel, and under the 23d subdivision, which is that of "Manorial Glooms," I found that the particular uncanny atmosphere that hung over Awfulmoor manor was listed as third. I need not, therefore, describe it.

On the second morning after our arrival, the new lord of the manor being busy with his accounts and his mind appearing to be at ease, I ventured out alone upon the wild, mysterious plain from which the antique structure derives its name. After a short walk across the awful expanse of country, if a man should reach in his pockets he would find them filled with condensed horror. I was compelled to empty mine a number of times, and thus I left behind me a weird, winding trail.

On that walk I met with a fellow-pedestrian, a small man, of quiet, well-meaning manner, who told me his name was Stablewindow. Under his left arm he had a black box resembling a camera, with a circular hole in one end, and in his right hand was a small round mirror. Seeing my eyes resting suspiciously upon these implements, he explained:

"The ghastly atmosphere of this region is almost impervious to the sunbeams. Most of them curl up and wither far above the ground. We who live here are accustomed to the half-light. Whenever I am lucky enough to find a sunbeam that manages to pierce the murkiness I catch it upon this mirror and reflect it into the box. I then sell them by the dozen to theatrical managers for use in producing the misty light of tempests and scenes of terror in sensational dramas. I tied them up in assorted bundles, and—"

"What was that?" I cried, clutching his arm.

A low whistling had arisen in the air, swelling gradually in power and hideousness. It seemed to pass directly over our heads, and then hissed away into the dismal air. I tried to scout the idea, but it did seem fearfully like some deadly sphere flying close over us. I thought of the basket ball of the Awfulmoors, and shuddered.

"Don't be frightened," laughed Stablewindow—a low laugh with cynical cunning in it. "It is nothing. The air in some places simply becomes too highly charged with the horror of this region. It gradually forms an immense sphere or globule that acquires the power to hurtle through the air like a bolt of lightning. You will soon grow accustomed to it. They have never been known to injure men or women. Sometimes places fly from it and kill animals, as this one did."

He pointed over towards a thicket and I saw a wild ass in his last throes, his beautiful head lifted piteously upward and his quickly-stiffening neck writhing with the effort to rise from the ground.

"You say these spheres do not injure people," I said to Stablewindow, with my eyes intent upon him. "How about the death of Lord Awfulmoor?"

He quailed visibly before my scrutiny, but in a moment he laughed, shrugged his shoulders, and, darting from me to a distance of about 10 feet, caught a sunbeam upon his glass and deftly reflected it upon the box.

"That makes a dozen of rare quality now," he said. "As I have a hurry order for them I must bid you good day."

I will copy here from a report I sent to Combs in London:

"Last night Lord Awfulmoor was greatly depressed and desired to walk. I have not yet told him of my adventure with the man Stablewindow, and will not until I hear from you. I think the sun had set when we started. I say 'I think' because one never sees the sun here, the atmosphere being so laden with mystery that few beams get through, as Stablewindow had pointed out. We walked together, talking commonplaces, when, without warning, there came that appalling hiss, which I have already described in former report. It was now more horrible than before. It began seemingly at a long distance, hurtled straight for us, increasing to a frightful roar. It passed directly over our heads at a stupendous velocity and died away with a long, dreadful diminuendo, like a hideous moan. I turned to Lord Awfulmoor. His face was ashen, his eyes staring. Suddenly he drew back, clutched the hair over his ears with both hands and shrieked:

"'My God! My God! It is the basketball.'

"From that moment he has been a changed, wilted, spiritless, foreboding man. When we returned to the manor we found Stablewindow there, smiling and delighted. He invited Lord Awfulmoor to dine with him on the evening after tomorrow. Write me full directions as to whether I shall let him go."

On the morning of the day when the young lord was to dine at Stablewindow's I received a letter from Combs directing me to persuade Lord Awfulmoor to accept the invitation. I was directed to conceal myself behind the nearest of a line of rocks running from near Stablewindow's house as soon as the lord went in and stay there until he came out. Combs assured me that he would be there on time and that we would take the greatest villain of his experience into the toils.

That evening, after Lord Awfulmoor disappeared in Stablewindow's house, I easily found the rock, though how that wonderful brain of Combs acquired a knowledge of its location without having seen it I cannot conceive. The evening lumbered through the thick atmosphere. The night was exactly suited to our purpose. The moon shone dimly, but sufficiently lighted the path Lord Awfulmoor would return by. It should be explained that moopheams, being weird in themselves, have an affinity for the uncanniness of that dreadful waste and pass through it easily.

At last Lord Awfulmoor came out. I could see that he was very apprehensive as he walked toward me, stopping now and then to look fearfully over his shoulder or up into the melancholy air. Suddenly I began to shake with fear. From a thicket near me I saw emerge a long, thin strip of dense fog. It slipped stealthily behind Lord Awfulmoor, and when I saw it begin to curve I almost cried out in terror, for I knew then that its deadly purpose was to wind itself around the doomed man and hide him from my sight.

"Combs!" I cried in torment. "Combs! Combs! Why are you not here? What, in heaven's name, can I do, alone and unaided, with this fog? I cannot unwrap it. But you, Oh! Combs, you could take hold of it and——"

I was stopped by a spasm of mortal terror. Just as the string of fog was beginning to wrap itself around Lord Awfulmore, as he passed me and strode on toward the manor, there arose, in the direction of Stablewindow's house, that fearful, paralyzing hiss in the air. It came on and on, growing louder. The dire noise seemed to fill the whole world. Lord Awfulmoor turned and looked back, palsied with horror. I looked in the direction his eyes were fixed and saw in the air a sphere that emitted a dazzling light from distorted eyes, nose and mouth. It whirled about, sending forth a direful whistling that turned human muscles into ice. It swerved from its course and I saw that it was about to strike the earth for a bound. I was transfixed. I had drawn my revolver, but my muscles refused to raise it from my side.

"Combs! Combs!" I tried to shriek.

The deadly missile struck the earth and bounded unerringly for Lord Awfulmoor, cowering before it, but at that moment there arose on the air of the night a wild cry of exultation, and from behind the rock next to me rushed Combs, and with a mighty sweep of his arms he swung aloft a bushel basket and caught the ball in it just as it would have struck Lord Awfulmoor down.

I rushed forward and the three looked down at the ball until it stopped spinning in the basket. Then we saw that it was indeed a basketball, in which Stablewindow had cut eyes, nose and a mouth, inserting glass in them, and inside the ball was fixed, with the ingenuity of the fiend he was, an electric battery.

As we examined it there came again that hissing noise, but neither Lord Awfulmoor nor I were afraid, for Combs was now with us. Louder and louder sounded the noise, and suddenly Stablewindow, whom we had seen stealing forward through the murk, sank to the ground in a heap, and the whistling moaned away into the night. We ran to him and he was quite dead, struck down by a coagulated sphere of the horror of that vast and awful waste.

"The most accomplished villain I have ever tracked to his doom," Combs declared, still holding the bushel basket in his hands.

"How can I ever thank you enough?" cried Lord Awfulmoor, grasping Combs' wrist, as his hand still clutched the basket. "But tell me one thing. How could you have known that there was a flesh and blood demon like this on my trail?"

"Why, my lord," Combs smiled, "that was one of the simplest points in the game. I knew it from the theft of your suspenders. I have made 29,737 tests and have found that nothing reveals the quality of a man's imagination so surely as the set of his suspenders over his shoulders. As soon as he told me of this, my dear Swatson, I knew we had a foeman against us worthy of our steel and as soon as he got possession of your suspenders, Lord Awfulmoor, I knew he was wily enough to know of their indiscreetness and could safely himself that there was a deadly basketball imbedded in your inherited imagination."

CHAPTER XXXVI.
Aunt Cynthia's Plan.

SOME minutes passed, during which the aunt and her nephews devoted their faculties to listening and did not speak. Not even the twittering of a bird reached their ears. Each youth grasped his rifle and was alert for the first sign of peril, for neither needed any instructions as to his duty.

With their nerves on edge, Stanton was the first to give way to impatience.

"I can't understand why Capt. Choteau and Logan stay outside while we are here. Logan was in a tremendous hurry to reach this place, and now doesn't make any use of it."

"I was thinking the same thing," said Arthur; "we have plenty of room for him, and he must be in great danger out there—and so is the captain; but he doesn't understand the ways of the woods like Logan."

"Didn't you hear what me and him said?" asked their aunt.

"We couldn't catch it all."

"He promised to go back and bring Capt. Choteau."

"The captain won't come."

"Logan promised to bring him."

"He has plenty of time; what will he do if the captain refuses, as I know he will from the way he acted a little while ago?"

"Logan gave me his word that he would lift him on his shoulders and bring him in," said Aunt Cynthia, as if that settled the question.

The boys glanced at each other, and, despite the gravity of the situation, smiled. It was plain that the delay was causing the lady misgiving, and some minutes later she said:

"I wonder if Logan was fooling me."

"Whether he was or not," replied Arthur, "he never will bring the captain here, because he can't; he has a sword and is his own master."

Aunt Cynthia was silent a little while longer. She was thinking hard over a new scheme that had come into her mind. Finally, she out with it:

"I tell you, boys, it won't do! It's wrong! I insist that you go after them both and tell them they must come here right off!"

The youths heard these words with consternation, but there was no mistaking their earnestness.

"That would never do, aunty," said Stanton, "Logan would be offended and would never forgive us. You know he was angry a little while ago when we left you."

"Is he more important than me?" I'm already offended; I won't stand it!"

"That may be, but it can't be helped; Logan is master; we never would have been able to leave home but for him; we must obey him."

"He didn't tell you to stay here until he came back."

"But he expects it, as he did awhile ago."

"How do you know he does? You have never disobeyed me yet," she added, with biting sarcasm; "you run no risk and I command that you go." Despite the preposterousness of the scheme, each youth began to ask himself whether it could be carried out without undue risk to anyone. What induced them to entertain the thought was that so much time had passed without showing any reason for believing any of the Nippinochs were near. They must have paused in their pursuit, and the boys could think of no cause why the Mingo and officer should not join them.

Had they taken a few minutes to consider the matter, they would have dismissed it as suicidal; but the confinement in the narrow space and the waiting without anything occurring was irksome.

"Suppose, aunty, I should go alone?" suggested Arthur.

"No, both must go, for, if the captain is stubborn, Logan may need your help to bring him in."

"What do you say, Stant?"

"I don't know what to say; it isn't like it was a while ago, and there's no reason to believe the Nippinochs are near; it is only a little way to where we left the captain, and it won't take us more than a few minutes to find out how the land lies. We shall be so close, aunty, that if we see anything is wrong, we can be back in a jiffy."

"Let's go! Come on!" exclaimed Arthur, yielding to his sudden impulse and creeping outside the cavern where he rose to his feet. Stanton immediately joined him, and then the two proceeded to carry out a plan which, in view of what had taken place only a short time before, was inexcusable in its rashness. It seemed that nothing remained to round out and complete the blunder, and yet the monumental culmination came a few minutes later.

No one of her age could have been more conscientious than Aunt Cynthia, and for a time she enjoyed the sweet consciousness of having done a high though not specially pleasant duty. It was time the two men were at the cabin, and since they delayed their coming, it was her province to remind them so forcibly of their remissness, that they could not but obey her wishes.

"When they see the boys they will know I am alone, and all will hurry back as fast as they can. Who cares if Logan is offended? If he says anything to the boys, they can lay it on me, 'cause I made them go, and he knows I'm not afraid of him if some people are."

She uttered an exclamation as a sudden idea flashed upon her. She thought it was an inspiration, when it was simply the crowning act of idiocy.

"Logan was mistaken; the Nippinochs he expected have not come; they are further in the rear than he thought; they may come pretty soon, but we are throwing away precious minutes; I know the course to Warrenburg and can go there as well as they; I won't wait for them; instead of my traipsing behind Logan and Arthur, let them follow me."

Emerging as had the boys from the cabin, she stood a brief while and looked around and listened. She saw and heard nothing unusual, and a moment later began walking rapidly in the direction of Fort Dinwiddie.

CHAPTER XXXVII.
Knight and Lady.

CAPT. EUGENE CHOTEAU was standing, with drawn weapon, after the disappearance of his friends, when the very thing he expected took place.

On the back trail three Nippinoch warriors were coming directly toward him. Beyond question they had discovered and identified him before he saw them, else they would not have approached in so open a manner. They knew him as a friend of Lame Panther, Great Bear, and, indeed, the whole tribe, among whom he had spent several days. Was he not, therefore, an ally, anxious for the success of their schemes of evil against the English?

Each buck carried a rifle, tomahawk and hunting knife. The officer, sword in hand, calmly watched them as they came up and halted within arm's length. Only one of their number could make himself understood in broken English.

"Hooh, brudder, see palefaces go past?"

"Yes, say go zat way," coolly replied the captain, indicating the direction by the point of his weapon; "and it was one leetle while ago."

"Hooh! heap good!" grunted the pleased warrior, striding off. But the officer leaped like a cat in front of him and interposed his weapon.

"You cannot go; zey have ladee; no gentlemen will disturb ze noble ladee; you must turn back and apologize."

Though the Nippinoch may not have understood the chivalry of these sentences, he did understand that the Frenchman had dared to check him, and he was aflame with rage. The action of the white man told the story with equal emphasis to the other bucks. All three dropped their rifles and whipped out their long, keen hunting knives, for they were the preferable weapons at close quarters. Thus the officer was assailed by three fierce men with knives, but bear in mind that he was the best swordsman in his regiment.

In such a battle much depended upon the one who is the first to attack, and the captain's act was an illustration of David Harum's wisdom in advising a man to do others as they would do him, and to do it first. The foremost Nippinoch was in the act of leaping like a panther at the officer, when he was met midway by a lightning thrust, there was a vivid flash under his left shoulder blade, as the point of the sword appeared for an instant and was withdrawn with a quickness that no eye could follow, and the buck slumped down in a heap, killed before he had time to make a single yawp.

But the other two warriors were upon the officer in a twinkling. Both, however, were in his field of vision, and like the skilled pugilist, he noted every movement. Leaping a single pace backward, he darted forward again, as if feet and limb were made of rubber, and carrying the blow of one, he ran him through, with the same marvelous celerity, and seeming lack of effort as at first.

Quick as he was, Capt. Choteau was unable to parry the blow of the third, though his own weapon had been extracted in the fractional part of a second; but the amazing swordsman gave an example of dodging which no person could have surpassed. The panting savage, his painted face agleam with ferocity, struck viciously, and the officer heard the whizz of the knife that almost grazed his cheek.

(Written for The Sunday Gazette.)
(Copyright, 1903, by K. M. Birdsall.)

The failure of the blow gave him the opening needed, and before the Nippinoch could recover himself he sprawled forward and departed this life precisely as his predecessors had done. The whole three had been slain with incredible quickness, the strange combat having opened and closed within an interval of time that was less than three minutes.

The captain plunged the matchless blade several times into the earth to the hilt to cleanse it of its crimson stains, and the next moment after withdrawing it he, too, fell suddenly forward on his face and did not stir.

For he had caught sight of a fourth Indian hurrying to the spot. Although the captain had his pistol at command, his dread was that this new enemy would call his rifle into play. His purpose, therefore, in failing was to give the impression that he had been mortally hurt in order to draw the buck within reach of his sword.

Therefore, he lay motionless, but with his weapon tightly grasped and his half-closed eyes watching for his enemy, whose hurried footsteps he could easily trace over the pattering leaves. Let him but come within 8 or 10 feet and the seemingly dead man would dart forward and thrust him through before he could draw his hunting knife.

The ruse succeeded. The Indian continued to advance until within the distance named, when he stopped as if astonished at sight of the four lifeless forms stretched before him. Suddenly, without warning, one of them seemed to be hurled forward, as if shot from the mouth of a giant piece of ordnance, and crouching, like the very concentration of fury. With sword rigidly grasped, he aimed for his new antagonist.

But this time the Indian was as agile as he, and leaping lightly aside looked wonderingly at him, without attempting to use knife or tomahawk.

"A thousand pardons!" called the captain, with his old smile and certeous bow, "I did not observe zat it zos my friend Logaine; I crave your pardone."

The Mingo looked in amazement at the picture. Never before had he seen anything like it. Three men slain in the twinkling of an eye, without the use of firearms, without the least outcry, and with no harm to the man who had performed the astonishing feat.

And the wonderful swordsman stood smiling, bowing and humbly begging his pardon for his mistake as to the Indian's intentions.

"You do that?" asked Logan, quickly showing through the paint on his countenance.

"I do zat," replied the officer, with another bow, his white teeth gleaming under his mustache. "It vos, do you not zink-vot you call him?—artecstic?"

"Has my brother no hurt" asked Logan.

Having cleaned his sword, Capt. Choteau shoved it into his scabbard, and now slowly and deliberately made a complete circuit on his heels, bringing all his body under inspection.

"Obzarvo, my friend Logaine, vet you see."

It was plain to the Mingo that the officer had not so much as a scratch, not even a rent of his coat or trousers showing. Hence forward, he was sure of the unbounded admiration of Logan.

"How iz ze noble ladee?" asked Capt. Choteau, with much seriousness; "I hope she bears ze fateeg of zis journey well, ah, she is a noble ladee."

The Mingo did not quite follow the remarks of the captain, but he said:

"She made me come back to help you fight, Hoch' you don't need help."

"I am mooch pleased sat zis leetle affairs take place not in her presence—for it cause her one great zachock. My friend Logaine will be zo good zat he say nozing to ze noble ladee; her nerves may not stand it; will mine good freend Logaine obleege?"

The Mingo understood the meaning of his friend and signified that he would respect his wishes, though it was with a mental reservation. No person is fonder of boasting than the American Indian, but none the less he respects modesty in a true and tried warrior.

It came out in the conversation which followed that the affair described had wrought an important change in the situation. Logan knew that he and his friends were hotly pursued by a number of Nippinochs, and his purpose in lingering at the rear was to hold this party in check until his friends could reach the refuge described.

But the peril was merely postponed for a brief time. Had the Nippinochs already removed as factors in the problem located the whites they would have called others of their comrades to the spot, and the situation would have assumed the form already named. All this, however, was averted by the superb performance of Capt. Choteau.

The question now was whether the party, strengthened through the addition of the officer, should hold the fort until night, or press forward at once, with the certainty of another or perhaps more formidable encounter with the Nippinochs. The captain insisted upon leaving the question to the Mingo, while he, stirred by admiration for his new ally, was equally insistent that he should express his views, and the curious discussion was under, when to the amazement of both, Arthur Oakland and Stanton Bothwell appeared on the scene.

A glance revealed that their aunt was not with them, and Logan demanded the meaning of their extraordinary action. It was Arthur who made the explanation. Never before or afterward did any of the party witness such a scene as followed. Logan was beside himself with wrath. The gleam of his black eyes, and the tremor of his hand, as he placed it on his hunting knife, left no doubt that his fury over his disregard of his wishes was so intense that he was ready to visit the final punishment upon the boys.

They never suspected their frightful peril, but Capt. Choteau saw it and grasped the hilt of his sword ready to flash it out and anticipate the first action of the Mingo. Had the attack been made there can be no doubt, in view of what has been recorded, that Logan would have perished then and there as if smitten by a lightning stroke.

He did not carry out his fearful design, abandoning it, not through personal fear, but because he quickly regained control of himself and thought better. Without uttering a word, he strode in the direction of the cavern, the others following silently and paying no heed to the shuddering proof of Capt. Choteau's swordmanship which they left behind them.

The cousins were depressed, for a realizing sense of their great blunder had come to them, and each was at a loss to understand why they allowed themselves to be influenced by the whim of their aunt.

"I hope nothing has happened to her," said Stanton, softly, to his cousin.

"What could happen? We have been gone only a little while and whatever danger there was came from the rear, and Capt. Choteau has attended to that."

"Look at Logan!"

They had come in sight of the cavern, and the Mingo was seen to stop, partly bend his head and peer in. Then he went closer that he might see better, and almost in the same second leaped back as if from before the muzzle of a leveled rifle. Darting his penetrating glances here and there, he said in his sepulchral voice, "She is gone!"

FAME

By JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY.

I.

Once, in a dream, I saw a man,
With haggard face and tangled hair,
And eyes that nursed as wild a care
As gaunt Starvation ever can;
And in his hand he held a wand
Whose magic touch gave life and thought
Unto a form his fancy wrought,
And robed with coloring so grand,
It seemed the reflex of some child
Of Heaven, fair and undefiled—
A face of purity and love—
To woo him into worlds above.
And as I gazed, with dazzled eyes,
A gleaming smile lit up his lips
As his bright soul from its eclipse
Went flashing into Paradise.
Then tardy Fame came through the door
And found a picture—nothing more.

II.

And once I saw a man, alone,
In abject poverty, with hand
Uplifted o'er a block of stone
That took a shape at his command
And smiled upon him fair and good—
A perfect work of womanhood,
Save that the eyes might never weep,
Nor weary hands be crossed in sleep,
Nor hair, that fell from crown to wrist,
Be brushed away, caressed and kissed.
And as in awe I gazed on her,
I saw the sculptor's chisel fall—
I saw him sink, without a moan,
Sink lifeless at the feet of stone,
And lie there like a worshipper.
Fame crossed the threshold of the hall,
And found a statue—that was all.

III.

And once I saw a man who drew
A gloom about him like a cloak,
And wandered aimlessly. The few
Who spoke of him at all, but spoke
Disparagingly of a mind
The Fates had faultily designed:
Too indolent for modern times—
Too fanciful, and full of whims—
For talking to himself in rhymes.
And scrawling never-heard-of hymns,
The idle life to which he clung
Was worthless as the songs he sung!
I saw him, in my vision, filled
With rapture o'er a spray of bloom
The wind threw in his lonely room;
And of the sweet perfume it spilled
He drank to drunkenness, and flung
His long hair back, and laughed and sung
And clapped his hands as children do
At fairy tales they listen to,
While from his flying quill there dripped
Such music on his manuscript
That he who listens to the words
May close his eyes and dream the birds
Are twittering on every hand
A language he can understand.
He journeyed on through life, unknown,
Without one friend to call his own.
He tired. No kindly hand to press
The cooling touch of tenderness
Upon his burning brow, nor lift
To his parched lips God's freest gift—
No sympathetic sob or sigh
Of trembling lips—no sorrowing eye
Looked out through tears to see him die.
And Fame her greenest laurels brought
To crown a head that heeded not.

And this is fame

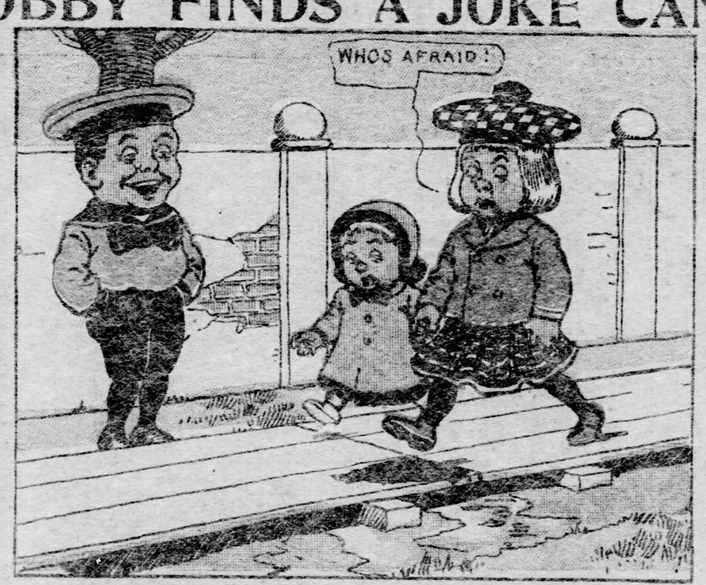
SIMON KEEPS PA IN TRAINING

THE TEASERS: BOBBY FINDS A JOKE CAN WORK TWO WAYS

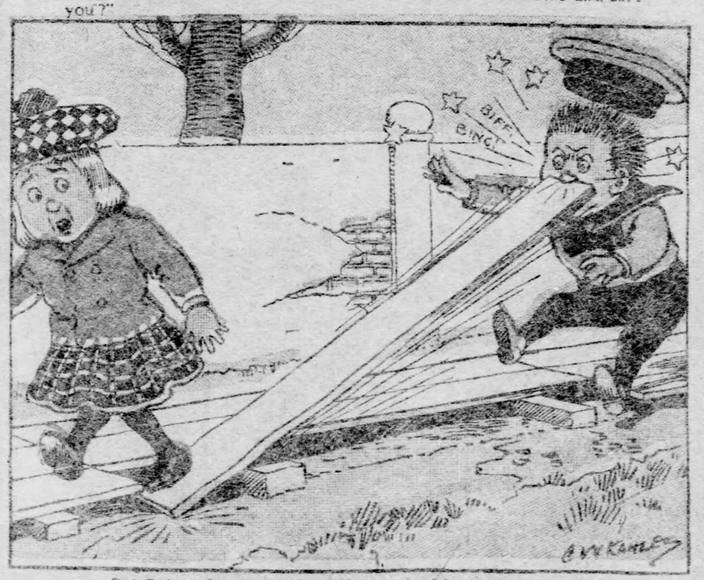
Bobby: I'll just take the nails out of this board and loosen it so that when the kids step on the end it'll fly up and hit 'em in the snouts.



"Hello! Miss Stuckup, you're afraid to step where there's a little dirt, ain't you?"

"Ho! Ho! Ho! It worked like a charm!"

Ha! Ha! Ha! Cry babies! That's the time I caught you for fair?



But Bobby forgot that the joke worked both ways.

Marjorie: Ha! Ha! Say, Bobby, what do they say about the one that laughs last?

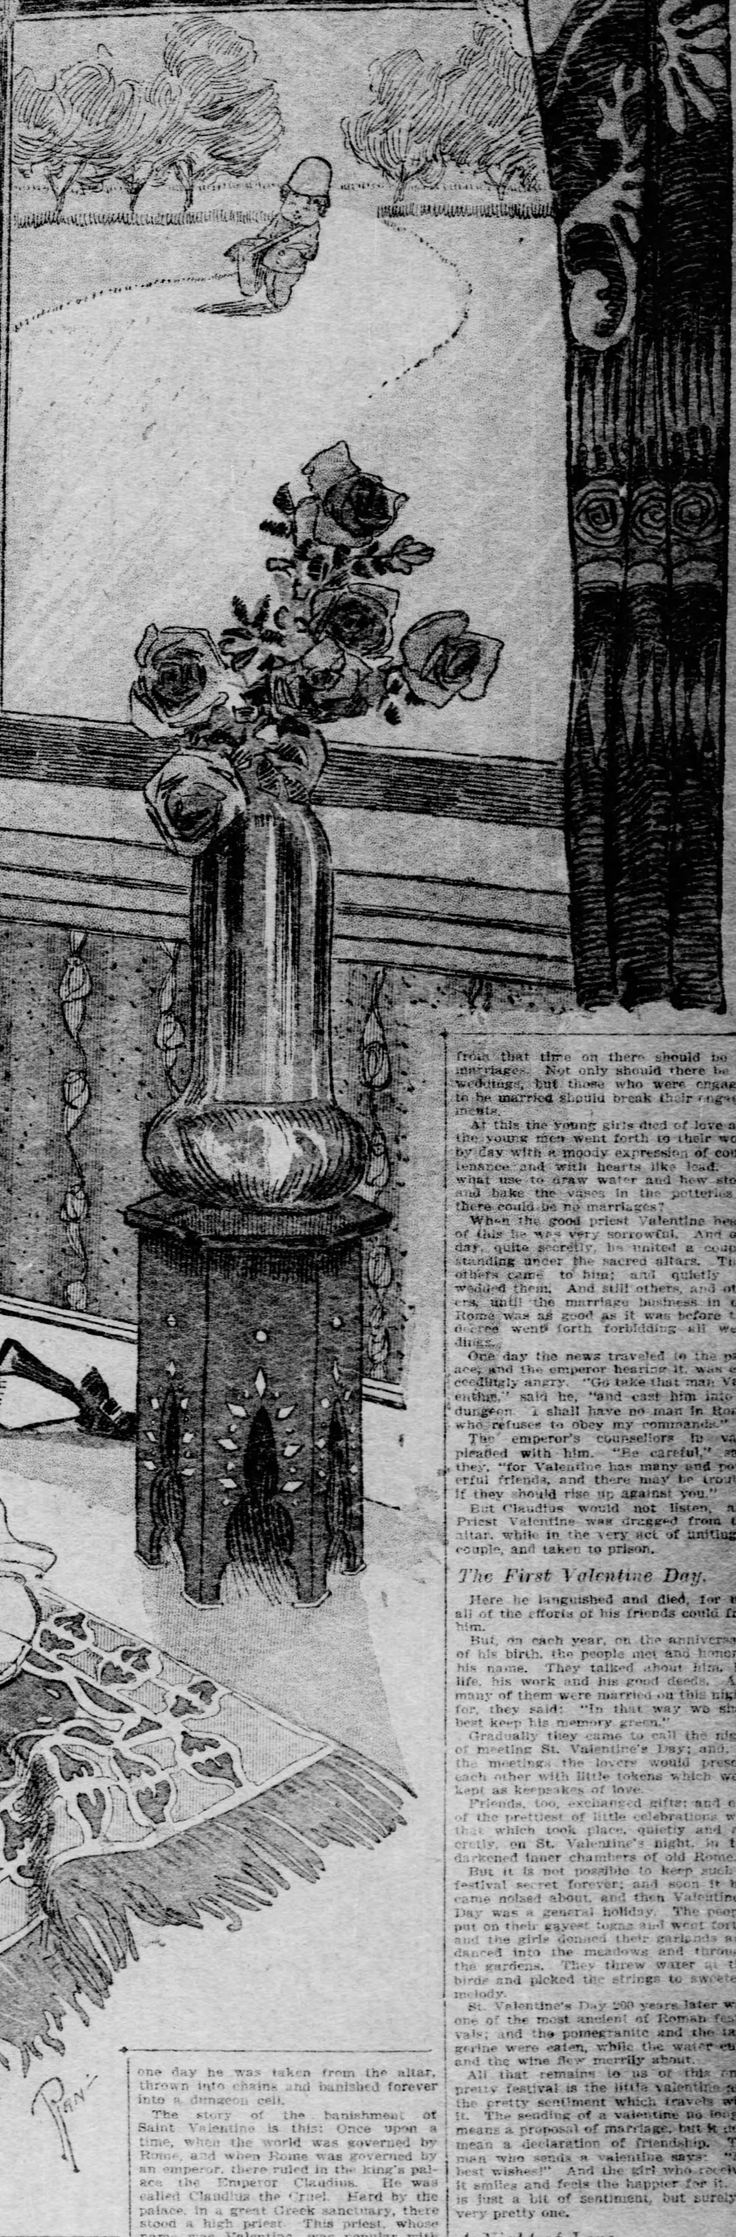
St Valentine's Day

ANCIENT AND MODERN

Customs



By MARTHA YOUNG

SINCE history grew out of myth-mists the 14th of February has been a time for exchanging love tokens—and hearts. In ancient Rome young folks observed a festival near about this date—the 15th of February more nearly approximates the date—the Lupercalia. It must have been an outdoor festival, keeping pace with the joyousness of nature itself, at that season blessed with budding flowers, singing streams just loosed from icy fetters, and mating birds, for the fete was especially that of the Luperci, the priests of Lupercees, the skin-clad god of old Italy, sometimes identified with Pan of Arcady. Lupercees, special god of the shepherds, protector of their flocks against marauding wolves. This was also for Roman youth the festival of Juno Februata. On this day the young men of Rome drew the names of young girls of Rome from this festival sacred to Juno. Juno, the protector of the female sex, to whom the women of Rome paid homage all the year round.

Origin of the Day.

Each Roman maiden paid to Juno individual court on her own birthday; to Juno Natalis, who blessed each girl child at her birth and took her under her guardianship. On mating day, mid-February, it was to Juno Februata that homage was paid. On the 1st of March was held Juno's great festival, homage of all women to Juno Matronalia, the young girl naturally and properly turning to Juno, the All Mother, for advice and sympathy concerning the man of her lot or choice. The month of June, Juno's own month, originally named Junonius, was the proper and propitious month for marriage—as it still is regarded. Also especially did the Roman ladies make orisons to Juno Moneta, guardian of the money chest. For the early Romans readily recognized and conceded the woman to be the proper holder of the money purse, and worshiped her as Juno Moneta, in a temple, which also contained the mint of Rome, on the Capitoline hill.

So, today, though Juno Regina no longer rules the heavens, she holds sway still upon some customs of earth,—the Lupercalia of Juno Februata still lives in our Valentine Day of darts and hearts, and the June wedding still is "just the thing." The early Christian bishops, wishing to lead gently the flocks into new folds, in most instances preserved the ancient pagan fete days, giving to them new names and dedicating the festivals to new patrons.

The pagan mid-February festival fell to the lot of St. Valentine, why and wherefore history says not, except that the good bishop, or perhaps he was only a presbyter, was full of love and charity, and lost his head somewhere about A. D. 270. For the good man was beheaded in Rome in the reign of Emeperor Claudius II.

Bishop's Red Letter Day.

So the Latin bishop of long ago has a red letter day in our, this-time, calendar.

Among all the nations whose languages are built upon the Latin are found the old customs of that ancient people. In France the daughter of Henry IV., Madame Royale, built near Turin a fair palace, the whole beauteous structure dedicated to St. Valentine.

At her regal house-warming, therein she decreed that each lady draw by lot a lover; hence the title of the lover by lot, her Valentine. These ladies and knights so paired by chance were to be lovers for an entire year. The ladies were to furnish each her own knight with trappings for the joust, and the knight was to present the prizes won by his skill and valor to the lady.

Old England had many Valentine customs. In Norfolk it was customary on Valentine's eve to slyly slip valentine missives attached to apples or oranges or sweetmeats into doors or windows.

In the southern states many old customs still prevail, the stock being of old English cavalier descent. I recall one Valentine's eve being in Mobile, Ala. There were many mysterious rings at the door-bell; the ringers slipped away unseen, leaving some valentine billet,—or only pretending to leave one,—which was quite as disturbing.

Exchange of Presents.

I have known in out-of-the-way villages fine Valentine parties to be given—usually for the help of some village charity. Each lady will send to the house where the Valentine party is to be held a gentleman's tie. These are put into a box to be drawn. Each lady arrives wearing an apron the counterpart in material and color of the tie she has sent. At the drawing of a tie, the gentleman matches the tie with the apron and so finds his Valentine for the evening. This is the lingering in this new land of the old custom of England and Scotland mentioned by Misson, a writer of the early eighteenth century as customary in his time and before, the "drawing of Valentines."

It was customary for presents to be exchanged between these allotted "Valentines."

In England there was a quaint custom for three young bachelors to go out together at daylight on Valentine's Day to catch and bring to the village alive an owl and several sparrows, emblems of wisdom and love. These shown at any or all houses of the village were passport to welcome and entertainment, the housekeepers setting for the refreshment of the early hunters pots of puri—puri being a malt liquor flavored with aromatic herbs. In some parts of England the boys of the village built a holly-boy while the girls concocted an ivy-girl, emblematic, doubtless, of the sturdy qualities of the male, the clinging attributes of the female. These were by their makers paraded on the village green; after enough parading it was the custom of the two bands to try to steal each from each its evergreen image. The boys tried to steal the ivy-girl, the girls to secure the holly-boy. When there was enough of this play, the evergreen lad and lass were made into a bonfire about which the children danced.

A good way to dispose of gaily the Christmas greens!

Peering Into the Future.

Valentine's Eve was also time for fortune telling. A maiden would write on slips of paper the names of her lovers. She would roll each slip tightly into a ball of clay. Throwing the clay balls into a vessel of water, she would watch with eagerness for the rising of one of the balls. The first clay ball to rise to the surface of the water was eagerly broken,—on the slip therein the maiden discovered the name of her lover who was to be her final choice.

The old custom of eating a boiled egg, the whites filled with salt and eaten also, was practiced on this day. The man of fate's decreeing is suffered to come in a vision at midnight and offer to the thirsty maiden a cup of water.

Five bay leaves plucked on Valentine's eve and pinned one on each of the four corners of the pillow and one in the center will bring to the maiden dreams of her lover.

The first man seen by a maiden on Valentine's Day by old custom's decree, her fate, as runs the old rhyme:

Thee first I spied, and the first swain we see
In spits of Fortune shall our true love be.

Quaint old customs, bright with the holly and ivy, redolent with bay's spicy balm, though out of vogue today they are certainly more worthy of preservation than the abomination of modern times—the comic Valentine. The lace paper, rose and gold, berhymed confections of our childhood, still are with us, perennially delighting the golden lads and lassies of today. We joy in their joy and gaily sing with Ophelia:

Good-morrow! 'Tis St. Valentine's Day, from that time on there should be no marriages. Not only should there be no weddings, but those who were engaged to be married should break their engagements.

At this the young girls died of love and the young men went forth to their work by day with a moody expression of countenance and with hearts like lead. Of what use to draw water and hew stone and bake the vases in the potteries if there could be no marriages?

When the good priest Valentine heard of this he was very sorrowful. And one day, quite secretly, he united a couple, standing under the sacred altars. Then others came to him; and quietly he wedded them. And still others, and others, until the marriage business in old Rome was as good as it was before the decree went forth forbidding all weddings.

One day the news traveled to the palace, and the emperor hearing it was exceedingly angry. "Go take that man Valentine," said he, "and cast him into a dungeon. I shall have no man in Rome who refuses to obey my commands."

The emperor's counsellors in vain pleaded with him. "Be careful," said they, "for Valentine has many and powerful friends, and there may be trouble if they should rise up against you."

But Claudius would not listen, and Priest Valentine was dragged from the altar, while in the very act of uniting a couple, and taken to prison.

The First Valentine Day.

Here he languished and died, for not all of the efforts of his friends could free him.

But, on each year, on the anniversary of his birth, the people met and honored his name. They talked about him, his life, his work and his good deeds. And many of them were married on this night, for, they said: "In that way we shall best keep his memory green."

Gradually they came to call the night of meeting St. Valentine's Day; and, at the meetings the lovers would present each other with little tokens which were kept as keepsakes of love.

Friends, too, exchanged gifts; and one of the prettiest of little celebrations was that which took place, quietly and secretly, on St. Valentine's night, in the darkened inner chambers of old Rome.

But it is not possible to keep such a festival secret forever; and soon it became noised about, and then Valentine's Day was a general holiday. The people put on their gayest togas and went forth, and the girls donned their garlands and danced into the meadows and through the gardens. They threw water at the birds and picked the strings to sweetest melody.

St. Valentine's Day 200 years later was one of the most ancient of Roman festivals; and the pomegranite and the fan-garine were eaten, while the water cups and the wine flew merrily about.

All that remains to us of this once pretty festival is the little valentine and the pretty sentiment which travels with it. The sending of a valentine no longer means a proposal of marriage, but it does mean a declaration of friendship. The man who sends a valentine says: "My best wishes!" And the girl who receives it smiles and feels the happier for it. It is just a bit of sentiment, but surely a very pretty one.

A Night of Love.

Cupid, too, is abroad that night, for, with the valentine there may go a story of love, and the meaning of St. Valentine's Day, in all its primitive ardor, may suddenly be present.

But St. Valentine's Day now means more one of prettiness and pleasure than one of love, for St. Valentine works, nowadays, platonically as well as ardently. And, in sending a valentine, the young man of today may feel secure, for he does not say anything which he may hesitate to stand by.

The valentine of this year is noted for its gorgeousness, and, in its most elaborate forms, it is satin, hand-painted and scented; and a motto is printed upon its shiny surface.

How to Celebrate St. Valentine's Day

By ELLIOTT RANDALL.

SAINT VALENTINE is the patron Saint of Love!

As such he lives, forever, canonized and worshiped. He is adored, not from afar, but in the hearts of his people everywhere.

All who are in love should now before the memory of Valentine; and all those who are in love, and who dare not speak the little word, can ask of him and can be sure that his aid will be offered freely.

Saint Valentine is not a mystic saint. He lived once upon a time; and, in the days of Claudius he was a well-known character.

It is said that he was an orthodox Grecian priest, and that he regularly served at the altars, burning the fires, and blessing the fruits and wines, until one day he was taken from the altar, thrown into chains and banished forever into a dungeon cell.

The story of the banishment of Saint Valentine is this: Once upon a time, when the world was governed by Rome, and when Rome was governed by an emperor, there ruled in the king's palace the Emperor Claudius. He was called Claudius the Cruel. Hard by the palace, in a great Greek sanctuary, there stood a high priest. This priest, whose name was Valentine, was popular with the whole city, and so very widely did his popularity extend that his church was crowded; and around the altars and the fires knelt all the wise people of Rome. Plebeians and paericians, young and old, rich and poor, ignorant and wise, all came to learn of Valentine and be blessed by him.

In the midst of his popularity there arose wars outside of Rome, and to the wars the emperor sent his citizens.

But the wars continued year after year, and many were loath to go. The married ones did not want to leave their families; and those who were engaged to be married openly demurred at the thought of going away from their sweethearts.

On hearing this the emperor became very angry, and a decree went forth that

Scenes of Interest in Venezuelan Cities

By W. FRANK McCLURE. (Special Correspondence Sunday Gazette.)

A Private Residence in Caracas.

VENEZUELA, the country that is figuring so prominently at this time in the eyes of the world, especially those of Germany, Great Britain and the United States, holds in store many interesting sights for the globe trotter who delights in equatorial climes. It will be recalled that the earliest Spanish explorers discovered this portion of South America, and finding an Indian village built upon stilts in the midst of one of the inland bodies of water, were so impressed with the sight that they gave to the country its present name, which means "Little Venice." Lake dwellers as seen on the Orinoco—the largest and most important of the principal rivers—for scores of years formed one of the most interesting sights.

The photographs on this page represent scenes about Caracas—the capital, and Puerto Cabello—two of the most important cities and the most mentioned in connection with the present situation. The views are recent ones and are all typical. Caracas, shown in the somewhat general view, is closely settled and has a population which hovers about 100,000, thus being equal only to the smaller of the large cities of the United States. The mountains form a picturesque background. High above the private residences rise the heads of the tropical trees, towering even with the dome of the artistically built capitol building. Trees, not only in Caracas but also in Puerto Cabello, and other of the smaller cities, line the streets just as do the old maples in North America. They are not always straight in their upward trend, but often bend their tops toward the center of the street.

Streets Lined With Poles.

The streets of Venezuela, although in the main not as wide as they should be, make a very creditable appearance. Some of them are lined with poles like those so common on the streets of the United States, which support telegraph, telephone and electric light wires. Venezuelan streets are illuminated by electric lights. The entrance to the capital grounds is lighted by huge arc lights.

This entrance to the capital grounds is lighted by huge arc lights.

This entrance, by the way, is an elaborate affair with its wide, high archways. In the grounds in connection with the capital there is a beautiful fountain and in front of the building proper there are palms and other tropical plants. The architecture of this building is not unlike much of that seen in Spain.

The monument to the Venezuelan federation, as shown in the photograph, is located at Caracas. With the Bolivar statue, the Washington monument and other memorials, it might be styled a city of monuments. The plaza de Bolivar is one of the prettiest spots in the whole country. One of the chief facts of history about this city is that a little less than a century ago it was almost wholly destroyed by an earthquake.

In Puerto Cabello one of the most attractive buildings, though not a particularly large one, is the United States consulate. Luther T. Ellsworth, who is the United States consul to Puerto Cabello, is just now returning to his post after a visit in North America where he has been recuperating his health.

Windows Are Barred.

The private residence pictured is at Puerto Cabello, though it is likewise typical of the homes throughout the residence sections of the larger Venezuelan cities. It will be noted that it is a one-story affair, and that there are bars at the windows. Iron fences are also much in vogue in front of such buildings.

La Guaira is a big seaport, the point at which the recent attack of the allies was made. This city, like Caracas, was destroyed by an earthquake in 1812. La Guaira is the birthplace of Bolivar, whose memory is so well cherished.

The interior of Venezuela is occupied in great part by agriculturists and cattle raisers. The extent of the cattle, hog and sheep-raising is something marvelous and has been so for many years. There are said to be three head of cattle to every inhabitant of the country. Modern methods and genuine thrift are not very much in evidence. This lack of progress is perhaps due in part to the climate. The people in the rural districts are chiefly the natives, the whites being found in the principal cities. And yet Venezuela is not by any means an uncivilized country. For years free schools have been maintained and have been liberally attended and supported.

Coffee and cocoa have long been raised in Venezuela, and the natives are also extensively employed in the preparing of sarsaparilla roots for market. Not a few prospectors from the United States have gone to Venezuela in search of gold and some have not gone in vain. Copper and coal have also been found in paying quantities.

VENEZUELA'S REIGN OF TYRANNY and TAFFY

How Gen. Guzman Blanco, the "Illustrious American," Tried to Perpetuate His Name.

By ROBERT CRR MOORE.

WHILE the eyes of the world are on Venezuela, the romance of Gen. Antonio Guzman Blanco, revives in men's memories. With Curacao as a basis he organized a revolution in 1870, and landed on the coast of Venezuela at the head of an army of invasion. Caracas, the capital, soon fell into his power, two years after the entire country acknowledged his authority and in 1873 elected him as constitutional president. From that date on he reigned like a czar, whether in office or out, though all the time styling himself, "The Pacificator and Regenerator of Venezuela." His power rested not on the suffrage of the people, but on a well organized army, which he was always careful to keep at his back or within calling distance.

From 1873 to the time of his downfall, in 1888, Blanco was not always president, because of a constitutional provision that no president could succeed himself, but he was a mighty power when on the throne and equally so behind it when off. He was constitutionally required to take a vacation every few years, but this made no difference, as he had a neat way of "fixing" things to suit himself. Unfortunately for him he fixed things once too often, and when he was about to come back from one of his vacation trips he found that the presidency had gone glimmering. Dr. Rojas-Paul, to whom he had "loaned" the presidency for the time being, proved to be not so much of a figurehead as supposed; so that when the great dictator was about to return the last time to resume the presidential chair, he found that his throne had been undermined.

His Pleasure Trips Abroad.

The figurehead whom Blanco set up to occupy the office of president each alternate term invariably appointed him as envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to all the nations of Europe. This plan had its advantages, as it afforded him the opportunity of foreign travel, besides enabling him to touch elbows with royalty, for which he had a passion.

Having secured cable connection between Venezuela and France the dictator continued to run his government on the long-distance plan. He always carried a carte blanche in his pocket and during these vacation trips, it is said, made large sums of money by the sale of Venezuelan concessions to foreigners.

On one of these European sojourns he negotiated a national loan with the Rothschilds, and in the interview with the baron, said he was much honored in meeting the head of the richest banking house in the world.

"And I am much honored," replied the baron, "by receiving a call from the richest man in the world."

"If you mean me," said Gen. Blanco, "you are mistaken. I am not so rich as represented; but had I all that is credited to me I would still be poor, very poor, in comparison with yourself and thousands of men in this and other countries.

"But I insist on the truth of my assertion," said Rothschild, "that you are the richest man in the world, for who else has estates comprising 600,000 square miles of territory? Who else has an income of $87,000,000? Who else has 2,500,000 of slaves?"

The only reply Blanco deigned to make to this thrust was, "I see you understand the politics of Venezuela."

His Qualities and Defects.

The chief characteristics of Guzman Blanco were intelligence, determination and inordinate vanity. His ascendancy over his people cannot be called by any milder term than that of a tyranny; nevertheless Venezuela prospered under him more than it ever did before or since. When time has obscured the defects of his character, the great autocrat will be classed along beside Bolivar and Miranda. A ruler must be judged not only by his time, but also by the people over which he rules. When we take into consideration the conglomeration of races that makes up the population of Venezuela it will be seen that Guzman Blanco was the man for his time. But there is no excuse for his inordinate vanity.

From the good old classics we learn that all Gaul was divided into three parts, but when we study this man and try to size up his inordinate vanity and his sublime self-conceit, and his colossal egotism, we are disposed to take issue with Caesar and claim that it was all concentrated in Gen. Antonio Guzman Blanco. So lofty are these blemishes in his character that if we ever see to the top of them we must do as some people say they do in looking to the top of the Farmers Deposit building, "We must stop and take a rest."

During their college days some of the boys took the short road to fame by carving their names in all the beech trees of the campus, and, strange to say, many of these same fellows were never afterward heard from. Guzman Blanco carved his name all over Venezuela. He christened states, provinces, cities, theaters, bridges, docks, railroads, reservoirs, parks, boulevards, streets and market houses with his mighty name. On every building he erected or repaired he placed a tablet to show that it was the handiwork of "the illustrious American." He covered his breast with decorations, many of which he had solicited from the kings and emperors of Europe, and most of the others granted to himself under his own orders by a congress he controlled. Every book and sheet of music printed in Venezuela had to bear the announcement that they were published under his administration. And it is said that even the list of subscribers in the telephone book had to bear the name of General Antonio Guzman Blanco in big heavy letters, like that of the Almighty in the prayer book, while all the rest had to be printed in ordinary type.

How He Exalted Himself.

Nor was this all. "An ounce of taffy is worth a pound of epitaphy." This was Gen. Guzman's creed, and he lived up to it. So fond was he of the confection of praise that he could not wait for the people to serve up bonbons for him. He made them himself, and saw to it that these delicious tidbits just suited the taste of Gen. Antonio Guzman Blanco. Here is a specimen:

"The Illustrious American,
General Antonio Guzman Blanco
President of the Republic
Erected this monument to Falcon,
The Great Citizen Marshal,
Founder of the Federation."

It is said that a wag once strolling through a cemetery was struck with this epitaph on one of the slabs: "Here lies John Smith, a lawyer and an honest man," and he was puzzled and wanted to know why they had to bury both of those fellows in the same grave. So when the sojourner strolls through the Pantheon of Caracas and sees the above inscription, he is puzzled, too, and wonders which man gets the praise, Blanco or Falcon. This inscription is only a specimen of hundreds of others scattered all over Venezuela.

But there is another inscription that the readers must not fail to get, for two reasons: first, because in it Gen. Guzman does not permit any one else to share the honor with himself; and second, because there is a romantic story connected with it. Here it is:

To
The Illustrious American
The Pacificator and Regenerator of the United States of Venezuela
General Guzman Blanco,
The Gratitude of Caracas.
1874

How He Was Humbled.

This inscription was on a pedestal surmounted by a splendid bronze statue of a horse, and on it the majestic figure of the great autocrat, the whole comprising a magnificent ornament in the principal park of Caracas. It was a fine piece of art. On the other side of the pedestal were these words:

Guzman Blanco dissipated anarchy, and established the liberty, the peace and the prosperity of the Republic at home as well as its dignity abroad.

All of which may be true, but it would have sounded a good deal better if somebody else had said it.

Now for the romantic story. Blanco had a nephew in the person of Gen. Ibarra, a very promising young man. This young army officer, with brilliant prospects before him, was engaged to the daughter of the United States minister at Caracas, Mr. Russell of Boston. Secretary of State Evaris had instructed Mr. Russell to press the payment of some claims for losses sustained by certain American citizens in the war on which Guzman Blanco rode into power.

Mr. Russell replied that there were only two ways this money could be collected. One was to send a man-of-war and bombard La Guayra, and the other was to offer Guzman Blanco a share of it. Unfortunately this letter leaked out, and when the official translation fell into the hands of "The Illustrious American" he promptly sent Mr. Russell his passport and ordered him to leave Venezuela at once.

Gen. Ibarra protested against such indignities to his prospective father-in-law. The protest was of no use. The doughty young general was given his choice between preferment in the army and the girl, and he chose not to throw up his "option" on the girl, sensible young man that he was. He broke his sword across his knee, threw the pieces at his august uncle and left the palace in a rage. He was immediately removed from command and his commission canceled.

That night he gathered a few of his friends and they sawed through the legs of the bronze horse on which the effigy of his uncle sat, and with a rope dragged horse, effigy and all to the ground with a mighty crash. Then, mounting a mule, he rode to La Guayra and caught the boat on which his sweetheart was about to sail for New York. He afterward married the girl for whom he had broken his sword, and no doubt has lived happily ever since, but he did not dare set his foot in Venezuela as long as "The Illustrious American" was there.

The End of Blancoism.

In 1888, when Blanco was about to start on one of his European trips in obedience to the constitutional provision that no president should succeed himself, he turned the presidential chair over to Dr. Rojas-Paul and told him he might occupy it till he came back. But Rojas-Paul was a bigger man than Blanco thought, and had ability to discern that the days of Blancoism in Venezuela were drawing to a close. He took hold with vigor and hastened the end along. His administration was an administration of reform. The army was reformed, the Blanco mercenaries were gradually weeded out, so that in a short time it was no longer subservient to the great autocrat's imperious will. While all this was going on of course the cable was kept hot with indignant protests from "The Illustrious American," but in vain. The great dictator made several abortive attempts to start revolutions, but he had lost his grip. The day of Venezuela's emancipation from Blancoism had dawned when Dr. Rojas-Paul sat down in the presidential chair. A new spirit possessed the people who had suffered so long from the tyranny of their constitutional president, who was monarch of all he surveyed. On one and the same night mobs attacked and destroyed the statues of Guzman Blanco in Caracas, La Guayra, Valencia, Puerto Cabello and Ciudad Bolivar. After this the government took the work of the iconoclasts and finished it. Everything that bore the name of Guzman Blanco was rechristened. The state that bore the name of "Guzman Blanco" was changed to "Miranda." Parks, hospitals, railways, theaters, fortresses, streets, boulevards, mountains and rivers were all renamed in order to get rid of the odious name of Guzman Blanco. And thus the name of the mighty dictator has been utterly erased from the records and from the map of Venezuela.

Lincoln's Wit Won.

When Joseph Jefferson, the famous American actor, was a boy, says the Kansas City Journal, he used to tramp from town to town in the United States as a small member of his father's traveling company. They once struck the town of Springfield, Ill., at a time when a great religious revival was in full swing. In the hope of preventing any play-acting at such a period the town council demanded a heavy fee for permission. This was a serious matter for the strollers, who had to earn their daily bread, and a local lawyer took up their case out of good will. So persuasively did he plead that the fee was not insisted on and the performance took place. The lawyer whose wit and humor served the players so well afterward became president of his native country, and is known to fame as Abraham Lincoln.

THE BLOODIEST DAY IN SWEDEN'S HISTORY By Allen Monroe Foster.

BLESSED is the land which has no history. So, shudderingly, says the now peaceful and prosperous city of Stockholm, with a fearful shot Arbor upon glass thousand centuries, to her terrible "blood bath," when the streets ran crimson with the life stream of her bravest and noblest.

In 1520, Christian II. of Denmark, of accursed memory, known as Christian the Tyrant, had just been made king of Sweden. But his crown did not sit securely on his head. He had failed in open war to conquer Stockholm, and had been compelled to use deceit, and to make many specious promises to induce the city to receive him as king.

But, with no intention of keeping faith with the people, he feared the time when his hypocrisy should be known, and planned a wholesale massacre of all who might be leaders in a rebellion against him.

To allay suspicion, he redoubled his false promises, professing the warmest regard for the late opposing party.

Great festivities followed the coronation, and for three days all was drinking, feasting and carousing, the new king mingling freely with the people, jesting with all, kissing and embracing many.

On the fourth day Christian announced that he had a great and pleasant surprise in store for the people, and sent especial invitations to the leading citizens, the distinguished church dignataries and the highest noblemen, to repair to the great hall of the palace.

When they were assembled, Christian appeared before them, and, with a great show of good humor, said: "Friends, I have promised you a surprise. The time for it has now arrived." And at a signal, all doors were instantly closed; soldiers swarmed forth, surrounding the bewildered people, who were declared under arrest on the ridiculous charge of heresy, and at once conveyed to the tower dungeon.

On the next day, November 8, destined to usher in the darkest epoch of the history of Stockholm, all citizens were forbidden to leave their houses on penalty of death, the streets were filled with soldiers and the palace surrounded with loaded cannon.

At noon, the prisoners, encircled by soldiery, were brought to the market place. The fatal hour having arrived, the Danish commander cries, in a loud voice: "These people have sinned against the church! For this they must die!"

At once there arose a frightful clamor. The accused shrieked denials, demanded a trial, begged for the last sacrament, anathematizing the treachery of the king, but their voices were drowned in the blare of trumpets, and the massacre begins.

Citizens, councilmen, the mayor, senators, bishops and nobles were slaughtered like cattle, and the hideously mutilated corpses left where they fell, to blast the sight of any mutineous spirit that might disobediently venture forth upon the street.

Days of Slaughter Followed.

This, however, was but the beginning. Night having arrived, the soldiers surged, unrestrained, through the city, plundering, murdering, committing nameless crimes.

The loathing sun rose at last upon a city bathed in blood; dogs ran about the streets, tearing the limbs and munching the bones of those who, but a few hours before had been the proudest dignataries of this unfortunate city. The savage soldiery, maddened by the excesses of the previous night, rove to and fro, killing at every step.

From every post dangles a human body; they hang from windows; heads are stuck on pikes and a frightful, howling procession rushes with them through the thoroughfares.

The night but prolongs the horrors of the day, and the next dawn breaks upon a rabble saturated with bloodshed and longing for some new diversion.

Further mutilation and destruction of the corpses filling the streets—bonfires—the nobility of Stockholm serving as fuel—seem all that remains, and shouting, laughing, singing, the mob throws the bodies upon carts, fills barrels with the decapitated heads and severed limbs, and drags them to the spot where Katrina church now stands. Soon the flames seize greedily upon their gruesome prey.

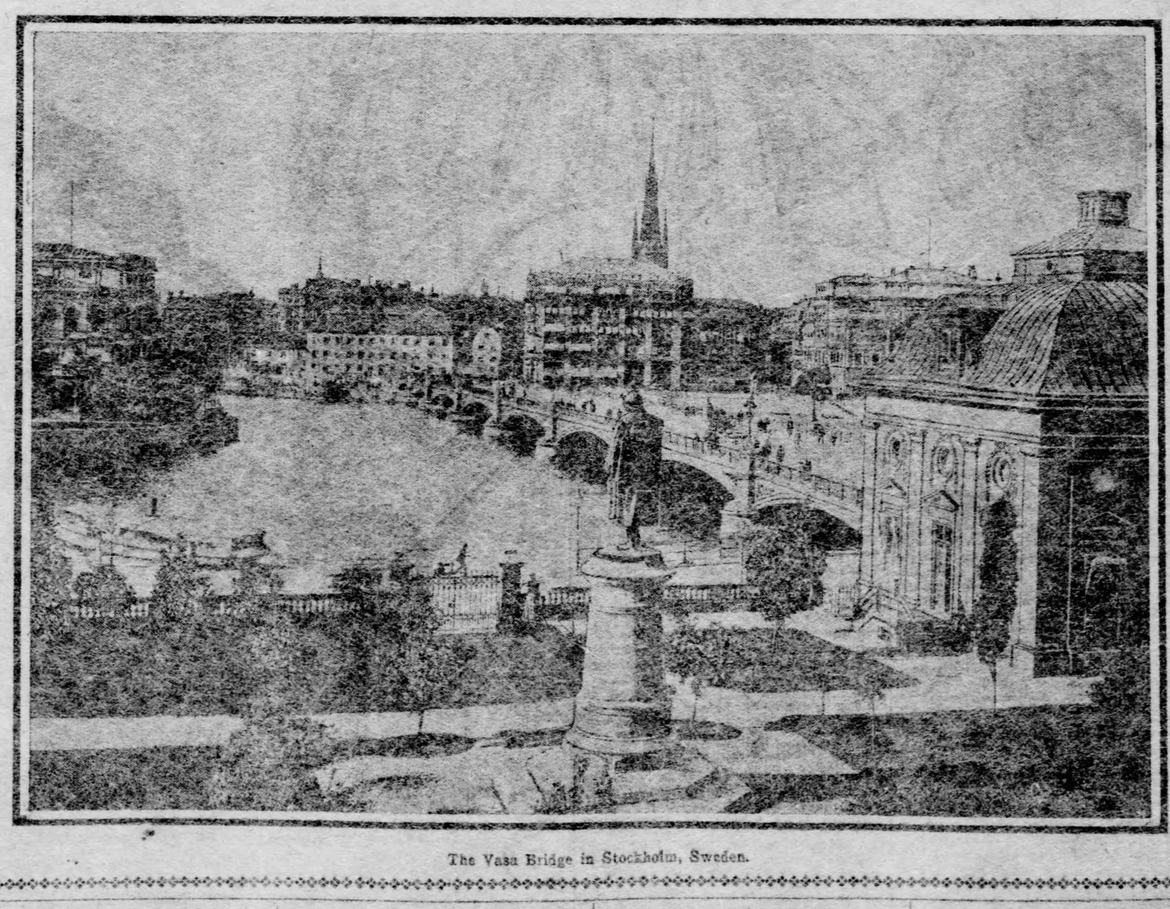
And is the tyrant now satisfied? Not yet. Terrors still pursue him. Stockholm is conquered, but the surrounding country must witness his prowess, that it may properly fear him.

So back to Denmark this monster king hews for himself a hideous road through the living bodies of an already vanquished people, leaving behind a trail of blood and carrion.

At Nydala 600 priests and monks are torn from the cloister, beaten and cast into the lake, or broken upon the wheel, and many other deeds of equal valor performed.

And at last, our doughty King Christian sleeps well o' nights, and goes on his wicked way rejoicing. Specters of disenthronement no longer rise before him, since of all his former opponents none are left.

But stop! There is one; one did escape. Among the noblemen summoned to the king's "surprise" were Erik Johanisen and his son, Gustavus. Gustavus, suspecting treachery, remained away, but Erik, despite the protests of his son, accepted the invitation and was one of the first to be slaughtered, while his wife and daughter were carried away and confined in the dungeons of the Blue Tower of Copenhagen, there to sicken and die.



The Vasa Bridge in Stockholm, Sweden.

Gustavus fled to Dalecarlia, penniless, an outlaw, a price on his head, hunted like a mad dog; but with the frightful wrongs of his countrymen, the causeless massacre of beloved friends, the murder of a sister, a mother, a father, burning in his heart and crying out for vengeance.

The king, content with the snares set for Gustavus' capture, feared him not, nor thought of him. Not once for Christian, the Tyrant, was the veil of the future lifted—that he might see this outcast youth upon the throne of Sweden, hailed as the deliverer of his country.

Gustavus had early made his plans—the first of which was to endeavor to reach Mora, where he hoped, by a recital of the inhuman deeds of the king, to rouse the people to rebellion.

He made his way but slowly; hiding in outhouses, in the cellars of peasants' cottages; working, at times, disguised as a peasant, at the most menial labor; fleeing through all but impenetrable forests and over pathless mountains; suffering incredible hardships and privations.

Often but a hair's breadth lay between him and captivity. Once as he was resting in a peasant woman's cottage, a pursuing party suddenly entered.

The woman, knowing Gustavus' identity and observing that the soldiers cast suspicious glances upon him, seized a spade, and striking him smartly upon the shoulders, exclaimed:

"What are you doing here, you lazy lout? Have you nothing to do but loaf around and stare at your betters? To work with you!"

This stratagem had the desired effect, and the pursuers soon took their departure.

Not less quick-witted and courageous was another peasant woman in whose cottage he had taken refuge.

Seeing soldiers approaching, she hastily pushed Gustavus into a small cellar and pulled a large tub of Christmas ale over the little door in the floor.

When the soldiers entered, they saw only a sleepy old woman, knitting in hand, dozing over the fire, and suspected nothing.

Once, concealed in a load of straw, he was being hauled past a pursuing party. One of them remarked:

"The lad might be hid in this straw. Won't be any harm to give it a prod with our spears," which they accordingly did, and passed on laughing, quite unaware that they had wounded Gustavus severely in the leg.

But at last, one Sabbath day, he reached Mora, just as services were concluded, and suddenly, travel-stained, emaciated, nearly dead, he stood in the path of the people and with words of fire, the outcome of his unquenchable spirit, he held them spell-bound for hours.

When, however, he called for volunteers to rally to his support in a war for freedom, utter was his disappointment. The people were already worn out with fighting and desired nothing so much for a time at least as rest. So one by one they turned away and left him feeling that his terrible journey had been useless and that hope was gone.

His Final Victory.

Sick at heart and utterly discouraged, he turned once more into the forest, resolved, if possible, to reach Norway and there find an asylum.

Trudging wearily along, he heard behind him—"Gustavus!" loudly called, and turning saw, running toward him, a deputation of peasants from Mora, which had been sent to beg him to return, promising him the unanimous support of the people.

It may seem strange that he hesitated, but so severe had been the unexpected blow of their first rejection of him, so tired was he in mind and body, that such a tardy and apparently lukewarm following seemed of slight value. So he wavered, little realizing that on his decision not only hung the fate of Sweden, but that the destinies of all Europe were to be affected.

For, had he disappeared forever in the wilds of Norway, one of the most important factors in the great "thirty years" war would have been missing, and it is impossible to speculate upon the result. But it may be safely said that there was really but one course open to his noble spirit, only momentarily subdued, and soon the hope of freeing his people, and the desire for vengeance rose superior to physical weakness and disappointment, and he returned.

His first army was a mere handful of 300 men, which was increased by February to 400. Realizing the necessity for a bold move, he descended with his little force upon Kopperberget, taking prisoner the bailiff of the mines there, and seizing large sums of money and many valuable goods belonging to Danish and German merchants, all of which he divided among his soldiers.

This liberal policy had immediate effect in bringing in many new recruits, and soon he found himself at the head of 1,500 men. From this time on his force increased rapidly and he passed from victory to victory.

Christian remained in Denmark, leaving the campaign in the hands of trusted commanders. But their policy of harshness and oppression had the opposite effect to that desired and expected, and the people were everywhere in revolt, looking to Gustavus as their only salvation. On June 6, 1523, he was unanimously elected king of Sweden by the Riksdag, and on June 28 of the same year the Danish forces in Stockholm surrendered and the hunted outcast of less than three years before entered the capital as king.

But now he is surrounded by thousands of loyal knights and nobles, his triumphal procession is one of rare splendor, and he moves in a halo of glory which is destined never to be dimmed, his name standing, to this day, with every true Swede for all that is good and great.

MASTERPIECES OF SOME PITTSBURGH MUSICIANS

OLIVE,— DAUGHTER OF HARRY BROCKETT.

IF MUSICAL gifts depend on hereditary right, then Pittsburgh will have in the next generation as fine a set of musicians as any city could desire. The establishment of the permanent orchestra, and the accompanying growth in appreciation of things musical, has brought here within the past decade a body of splendidly gifted men, who, adding their attainments to those already here, make a sum of musical ability probably not equaled by any similar city in the world. Many of these men are still young, and almost all have children who will grow up here, regarding Pittsburgh as the native heath of their gifts, and who will in all probability use their gifts here, after having attained maturity.

Especially prominent among these are the two children of Victor Herbert, who are habitual attendants at concert and opera, and who could give points to many a veteran on the musical rating of the city. Ella Victoria, Mr. Herbert's little daughter, is the elder of the two, and as like her father as a dainty little girl can be like a big bluff man. Her eyes and features are strikingly similar to his, and in pose and gesture she shows her paternity to any observing eye. During the spring season of the "pops" she was usually the presiding spirit in Mr. Herbert's box, and with a pretty dignity beyond her years, kept due rein on the children who frequently accompanied her young brother during the evening. At the Grand opera she was also a faithful attendant, showing by every part of her demeanor a thorough understanding of the music, and an unmistakable individuality of taste in the selection which seemed to appeal most to her. She is musical in more than taste, of course, and under the careful tutelage of her parents may develop into one of the notable figures of the young generation.

A Young Mechanical Genius.

Mr. Herbert's little son, Clifford, younger than his sister by some two years or more, is also possessed of a striking individuality, as well as being an unusually handsome lad. Boylah in every particular, full of curiosity concerning things mechanical and displaying a remarkable aptness in questions relating to complicated matters, he is considered a most promising boy by all who knew him—and these include almost everybody who frequents the concerts and operas, or visits often the music stores.

During the opera season last year Master Clifford greatly amused some older habitues by remarking, with a very blase sigh, one evening, "These days are full of work. One has to study in the morning, and then one has to take a nap in the afternoon, so as to be fit for the opera in the evening."

During a visit to one of the big music stores of the city not long ago, this bright lad instituted a series of inquiries relating to a piece of delicate machinery connected with some mechanical music box. One of the clerks explained, as far as he was able, trying to suit his language to the boy's age, but he found himself led further and further into the relations of the various parts, until he was all at sea, whereupon young Herbert regarded him with something like contempt in his clear eyes, and remarked: "Well, I surely thought you'd understand it, when you were sellin' it," and marched off to find some one more versed in the "wheels and things," to satisfy his eagerness to know. It is a recognized fact that a taste for music and the mathematical genius uppermost in mechanical pursuits, go hand in hand, and if one may prognosticate a little, it might be possible to foresee Victor Herbert's son applying his musical and intellectual heritage in constructing new devices for the world's industries, or discovering unsuspected powers in the "wheels and things" which are now of such absorbing interest to him.

Little Nymphs of Greece.

Among the children of the Pittsburgh orchestra the fairy-like little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Luigi von Kunitz perhaps holds chief place in interest. Born in Pittsburgh, the daughter of a Pittsburgh girl, and granddaughter of the most popular figure in musical Pittsburgh, this dainty little lady has a special claim on Pittsburgh affection. She is scarcely 3 years old, and with her forget-me-not eyes and tangle of sunny hair, challenges admiration from every one who sees her. Like the Herbert children, she has the advantage of musical ability pondered her from both parents, and recently, after a single visit to the musical kindergarten near her home, was able to place the notes properly on the staff and to relate pretty little bits of information about each. From her father, who is not less notable as a classic student, than as a violinist, she has already learned the Greek alphabet and lisps here prayers in Greek instead of English, drinking in the early principles of the language with her first words. German and English are used interchangeably by her nurses and parents, consequently she knows as much of one as of the other, calling a smiling "gute nacht" to visitors of Teutonic origin as readily as "good-night" to her mother's girlhood friends.

Needless to say, little Nausicaa is the pet and darling of the orchestra, and right royally does she exercise her sovereignty. During the engagement of the orchestra at the Buffalo exposition she stampeded at a matinee concert, and when two or three of the musicians sprang to go to her assistance, she picked herself up and called out to them calmly that she "wasn't hurt a bit."

Something more than a year and a half ago a little sister came to dwell with Nausicaa, and though she too was given a Greek name, Aglaia, to match her sister's, Josephine precedes it, making her rather more clearly a representative of her grandfather than the elder child. Bright brown eyes and dark hair distinguish Josephine from blond Nausicaa, and a thoroughly gentle "love-everybody" manner makes her a general favorite. She informs inquiring visitors that she is going to play the "Geige" when she grows up, and if asked for something in Greek, will begin at Alpha and lisp her way straight through to Omega without a halt.

Both the children have discovered that "something Greek will make father smile." There are probably few fathers in this twentieth century whose ears are delighted by the self-same words spoken by the nymphs of the golden age, in nursery dialect, but this is true of the gifted concertmeister of the Pittsburgh orchestra.

The McIntyre Trio.

Joseph McIntyre, the rarest artist who has dwelt in Pittsburgh for many a day, has three small possibilities in his Kentucky avenue home, two of whom have already showed marked ability to follow their father's footsteps. Mrs. McIntyre is also a pianist of high caliber and always joins her husband in the "informal two-piano evenings" which have made their home a delightful gathering place for music lovers, so the McIntyre children have likewise a supreme advantage in the double inheritance of musical taste. Washington, the elder lad, has already played semi-publicly at some of the father's recitals, and little Richard, a chubby 7-year-old, can follow easily in the family ways. Music is as natural to these boys as the expression of their mother tongue, but with all the artistic possibilities they display, they are as genuinely boyish as the most matter-of-fact mother could desire, coasting and skating at the head of the boys of the neighborhood, leading in most of the childish sports and displaying several other traits indicating the happy, healthy poise of childhood. Some months ago Washington, the elder lad, stalked in to his mother one evening with a wrathful protest in his face:

"Mother," he complained, "Richard is really too arrogant."

Richard had just been put to bed, but he sat up indignantly to defend himself.

"Mother, what does arrogant mean?" he asked, and his mother, caught between two fires, explained that it "meant to have a good opinion of one's self and not be afraid to say so."

"Oh," said Richard, satisfied, "then I am arrogant, and I'm goin' to keep on," and laid himself down to sleep the sleep of the unrumpled.

The youngest of the three boys, George, is barely a year old, a dimpled baby, who, however, fully recognizes his rights as a boy, and demands to be taken forth on all coasting expeditions possible. Wrapped up to his chin, with only two bright eyes visible between cap and coat, he may frequently be seen sandwiched happily between his brothers, flying down Denniston avenue on a sled or bobbing through the snow in Kentucky avenue, gaining rosier cheeks and healthier lungs with every breath of the frosty air.

The Name of Brockett.

For many years now the name of Brockett has been synonymous with good music in Pittsburgh. Most of the concert-goers can remember when Harry Brockett went abroad to study, carrying with him all the possibilities of a beautiful lyric voice, an intensely musical temperament and the confidence of his fellow citizens. The years of work and success which he has had since his return have brought his name into prominence with everybody who knows Pittsburgh musically, and the fact that he is a singer has somewhat overshadowed the equally patent one that he is a father—and a most loving one. His one small daughter, Olive, has shown marked musical taste ever since her babyhood, and is now able to play and read music which many a student twice her years fails before. She is a winsome little thing, slender and dark, showing a strong resemblance to her father, and is, of course, his most beloved charge.

Another member of the Brockett family, and a most important one, is Ashley, the only child of Alonzo H. Brockett, possibly the most genial and popular figure of local musical circles.

This little lad, left motherless while still a baby, has been his father's constant companion ever since, and is very frequently seen at the concerts at Carnegie hall. He is an unusually handsome boy, attracting everyone by his beauty and bright manner, and like young Herbert, he indicates a strong aptitude for things mechanical and mathematical.

A year or so ago, while accompanying his father on a journey, he found his way, during a stoppage, to the engine cab, where he astonished the engineer by picking out each separate appliance of the iron monster, showing an acquaintance with the various parts of the machinery which is rarely held by anyone outside the profession. With these two promising figures to carry on the Brockett talent, there is no danger of the family losing its prominence in musical Pittsburgh at least for a generation or two.

Youngest of the Gittings.

Nothing musical in Pittsburgh could be complete, for the past 20 years, without the stalwart presence of Joseph H. Gittings, or "Joe," as he is more familiarly known to his friends, wherefore his little daughter, Dorothy, the youngest leaf on a generously blossoming tree, claims rather more than ordinary note in a record of musicians' children. She is a slim, blue-eyed little maiden, just in the flowery part of her childhood, between nursery days and the school age. She has attended all the more important concerts ever since she was able to walk, and has a rarely critical taste for one so young. She now attends the musical kindergarten and has thus attained a familiarity with musical signs and literature which is enviable, and which will give her a precious foundation for the musical education of later years.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward J. Napier have a trio of bright little ones in their nursery, who again have special hereditary advantages in combining the lineage of Frederick Archer, one of the most prominent musical figures of the country, and their father, whose work has been recognized in Pittsburgh by circles far outside the one immediately interested. The eldest child, Dorothy, is a lovely little girls of 9, who was her grandfather's darling, and whose constant companionship with during the last year of his life, irresistibly reminded one of another grand old Englishman and his pet granddaughter—namely Gladstone and his Dorothy Drew. Norman, the only boy of the household, is a golden-haired, sturdy boy of 5, who stoutly asserts that "there are giants—only nobody sees them in these days" with an inflection indicating intense scorn for the skepticism of our degenerate age. The baby of the flock is little Frederick, named for her grandfather, and combining an unusual brightness of mind with a most attractive grace and daintiness of person.

A Doll Her Audience.

John Prichard, also one of the stalwarts, has only one bud in his home, a little maiden with cheeks like roses and a shower of golden hair, to whom has been given the sweet old Welsh name Elspeth. Elspeth's little hands took readily to the piano keys and perched up on the stool, where she sits a good two feet from the ground, she trills out daintily the lighter sonatas and studies which her father has given her. An immense doll, almost as big as herself, was her reward for a recent attainment in piano study, and usually while she plays this beloved companion is seated near to listen.

Going up a step or two from the nursery level, there are several of the musicians who have children, already showing unusual gifts in their parents' profession. The debutante daughter of Mrs. Kate Ockleston-Lippa, whose life in Pittsburgh has done much in making the city as musical as it is, is herself a pianist of more than ordinary merit, and Arthur Lippa, the sturdy son of the musician, is likewise possessed of marked ability. Adah Sampson-Thomas, long reckoned one of the lights in the vocal world, has also a daughter just budding into womanhood, whose possession of a lovely bird-like voice has given delight to many of her mother's friends, despite the fact that she has been sedulously kept in the background, through her mother's aversion to premature display of youthful efforts. She is a beautiful, brilliant girl, and with her voice developing in due proportion in the next few years she bids fair to hold a place, scarcely less notable, though different in point of vantage, to that which her mother has so long graced.

Mrs. Thomas' son Theodore is a collegian now, and gives his time to study to the exclusion of music, which may later come to the surface in his life.

Two English Fays.

The two little daughters of Grace Damian-Bronon, Aileen and Juliet, attend many of the concerts with their parents, and are known at least by sight to most of the musicians of the city. Their fair English faces and bright eyes make them notable in any group of children, while their bright hair, truly like the "banner of glory," to which England's poet compares the locks of her maidens, always seems to gather sunshine in their vicinity. These two little ladies made a long visit to Europe last year, and have already shown evidence of intellectual possibilities which will make them their father's own daughters, whatever musical abilities may develop later from their maternal inheritance.

Ad M. Foerster has a quiverful of children—mostly grown beyond the purely childish limit, and almost all displaying some evidence of the musical taste which is theirs by paternal right.

George H. Wilson's three beautiful daughters have shown themselves so rich musically that their father gave them up for several years' European study, and another notable musician of the city—Walter E. Heil—has one fine son following steadily in his father's footsteps, and another one, a rosy specimen of 6-year-old boyhood, ready to take up the march as soon as he is permitted.

With such an enriching of the stream of musical ability, swelled, as it is sure to be, by newcomers from year to year, the musical future of Pittsburgh seems well assured particularly and reassuringly so, since of all the children noted, there is not one who has not already shown decided taste and quickness in music and musical ideas.

THE TEACHER OF MUSIC

A Series of Nine Articles on "Music and Musical Training."—No. 2.

By ANNA W. PATTERSON,
Mus. Doc., B. A.

OF all branches of the musical profession none is so generally or widely followed as that of the teacher of music. From the young lady just left school, who teaches piano at $2 or less, a quarter—a fee which scarcely keeps her in shoe leather and gloves—to the much patronized, fashionable "professor," who charges $5 a lesson for telling the aspiring prima donna that she has hitherto been "placing" her voice incorrectly; there is every specimen, genus and variety, of the instructive machine known as the music teacher.

Even the prospective artist, before he or she had quitted the student career, takes beginners, or junior pupils at schools, in order to eke out individual educational expenses and gain experience and sounder personal knowledge. For, in teaching, the preceptor also learns; in clearing away initial difficulties for young minds, one must first be sure of the foundation oneself; while instructing others one insensibly imbibes the great lessons of patience, perseverance and self-control. Thus teaching is the greatest of all disciplines, if the teacher be but conscientious and faithful in the discharge of duty.

But, if teaching is the first drill of the embryo musician, it is often also the "last resource" for a living of the decayed concertized singer or executant. It is, moreover, alas, frequently the only available means of sustenance of many who would be more congenially occupied as creative or executive artists—but more of this later.

There are teachers and teachers. The most brilliantly gifted are not always those best fitted to impart their knowledge and ability to others; indeed, strange as the statement may appear, those who know most are those least conscious of their own attainments and are hence the more diffident to assume authority of any kind. Thus is humility often the hall mark of true genius; but it is the humility of unflinching egoism. Genius knows its own limitations and seldom oversteps them.

There is a touch of pride as well as reserve in being able to know how far one may go without compromising one's own dignity. It is the intimate analysis of self that makes genius at once exclusive and universal; but such folk cannot share their sentiments with others, or else they will certainly be misunderstood. To some they will appear ultra-modest; to others assertive and overbearing. Hence genius prefers its shell, and courts acquaintance with the world through its works rather than through its personality. Only now and then—perhaps once in a lifetime—a stronger or kindred influence will upraise the veil. Otherwise genius walks alone its chosen path, even though it be one of thorns. Hence the creative artist seldom shines as an instructor.

The Ideal Teacher.

The ideal teacher, on the contrary, must unburden himself to his pupils. He should do more. He needs to identify himself with the entities with whom he comes in contact, enter into their thoughts, aspirations and difficulties, and, in short, go over the ground hand in hand with those inexperienced. In music the complexities of notation need much careful elucidation in order to make them intelligible to a budding mind; a good teacher will have numerous little plans to explain and impress upon the infantile intelligence the why and the wherefore of time values and key signatures, etc. In harmony and counterpoint rule after rule is learned but to be broken or glossed over with maturer experience and more confident savoir faire; the teacher who knows how to explain license reasonably will best clear away those seeming incongruities of statement and will less retter the inquiring or logical mind of the embryo composer.

All learners are not alike; some are careless and apathetic, others stupid and dense, a few earnest, plodding or brilliant. The best teachers require to be apt at reading character; or, rather at discerning the spirits of those taught. Methods of instruction must vary according as the recipient of the instruction is bright or the reverse. An indifferent, impatient, harsh or unsympathetic teacher—especially if the subject be an emotional one like music—can do an incalculable amount of harm, and often entirely stunts or stultifies an otherwise promising talent. Thus the responsibilities of the teacher—as of the parent—are great; these hold in their hands the fate of future generations.

Two Classes of Teachers.

It has often been a subject of query whether a teacher, say of pianoforte, should be himself a good executant. Nothing helps a young learner so much as to have a piece ably and correctly played over for him. Yet the fact remains that many excellent teachers are themselves but indifferent performers, and that they can seldom play the pieces they teach.

Under this heading we must consider two classes of teacher: First, those who, though they have been well taught, and can critically judge of the best styles of performers, yet have never themselves had the ability or nerve to shine as soloists. There are many such in the great army of teachers, and they are none the worse teachers notwithstanding. Secondly, there are those preceptors who have, in previous times, been themselves eminent executants or vocalists, but who, through want of leisure for practice or the loss of ambition to appear in public, have allowed their practice, and hence their executive skill, to slide, and so hand and voice have lost their former cunning.

In both these cases we maintain that the teacher, even though he cannot practically show how a passage is to be played—and no doubt this is a pity—is competent to beautifully and effectively teach and instruct, because he or she knows how such and such a passage should be rendered, albeit unable to demonstrate it personally. We are not, of course, now considering the sham professor of music, with little knowledge and less conscience, who takes people's money on the false pretense of giving honest instruction in return. Such a person is a disgrace to the profession and deserves exposure as much as does the quack in other learned callings. One must have learnt carefully and thoroughly to teach—that goes without saying. We have already hinted that there are different types of individual. No doubt each, if he be competent to instruct at all, influences a circle of his own—for we have all our proper spheres of utility and exertion.

Need for Teachers' Training School.

It is to be regretted, however, that there is no regular training college for teachers of music. Apart from the drilling of temperament—a very important point—there are so many little matters that require the music teacher's attention. The cultivation of ear and the faculty of reading at sight, as of memorization of pieces, are subjects much overlooked by the often too hard worked school music teacher who, in a lesson of 20 minutes, has scarcely time to discriminate between gifted and ordinary pupils. Some young folk prefer Beethoven to Chopin; others favor Bach in preference to the modern and more vividly "colored" school. It is a question of taste and idiosyncrasy. But these indications of individuality in a student are exactly what a teacher should make allowances for, no matter what the preceptor's own tendencies may be. This is why genius does not excel as a teacher, it is too self-contained. The successful imparter of instruction to others must be able to place himself in the shoes of those others so as most effectively to grapple with individual aspirations. Hence women, with their innate sympathy and their tender feelings for child-life, make the best teachers. "Finishing lessons" from a master mean less nowadays since the universities have opened their doors for the full qualification of cultured womanhood.

Coming to the financial consideration of the music teacher's position, it must be allowed that this is, at present, in a most unsatisfactory position. Anyone who professes to do so, may pose as a teacher of music; and there is no limit, either ways, to the amount of fees charged. Thus, as we have already hinted, the school girl, who wishes to supplement her pocket money may teach at "starvation terms;" and the great star may charge what he or she likes in guineas for single lessons or a "set" of same. The public, on this point, are often much puzzled, and are frequently imposed upon in consequence. Often the incompetent and pretentious get what they ask for, no matter how exorbitant it be; while those who are best qualified to teach, through ultra-diffidence, may allow themselves to be "beaten down" to fees from which it is impossible to make a fair living. A school appointment, when it can be secured, is always desirable. The remuneration for time may be less than that which accrues from private pupils; but it is, at least, less fluctuating, uncertain, and represents, no matter how small it be, a steady and reliable source of income.

The Teacher's Fees.

Those who have made name and fame in the musical world, if they desire to teach, may generally demand and be entitled to receive larger fees. But, as a rule, the excessive charges of teachers are a mistake. Even the best disposed and most favorably circumstanced pupils will not long continue their $2 50 or $5 a lesson. For competent and well-qualified teachers, the uniform charges of $1 50 to $2 per lesson, or $15 or $20 for a set of 12 lessons, seems a fair standard which deserves to be generally accepted by instructor and instructed. We are now not, of course, considering exceptional cases, nor those of the pseudo-teacher who must always be a law, or rather lowlessness, to himself. Nor are we referring to the school salaries of eminent professors of music, which should often be much higher than they are, were full justice done to those whose attainments and position deserve peculiar recognition.

A few practical hints to the young teacher may now conclude this article. First, be sure that you care for teaching, and that you feel within you the ability to patiently and successfully impart knowledge. Then be careful to leave no stone unturned in your own culture, that your pupils may never catch you "tripping," and that you may always be at your ease and preserve authority in their eyes. When possible, qualify yourself by a bona fide public examination, or indisputable certificate, so that your standing in the profession and right "to teach and practice may be more secure. Lastly, draw up a neat circular, stating your acquirements and terms—which latter should be rated fairly if moderately, and send this round to all whom you may think likely to patronize you. Advertisement offers a means of becoming known; influence is a powerful aid in the securing of appointments and positions of all kinds. None of these avenues to active exercise of one's talents should be overlooked. And having done all, there often requires much patience to wait for the long hoped-for and often-tardy success. But all things come to him who waits, say the wise folk. Even if some of us occasionally question the truth of the saying, there is no doubt that the world is full of instances of patience and resolution being triumphant in the end. So struggling teachers of music, take heart! The pupil who comes not today may come tomorrow, and there is plenty of room in the world for all who do their allotted duties faithfully and well.

In Sulu.

"What is the excitement?" we asked.

"The sultan is going on a journey in about six hours," responded the trusty guard.

"But does it take him so long to prepare?"

"Yes; he has to kiss 200 wives goodby."

THE FLUFFY SUMMER GIRL IS COMING

THE FEATURE OF THIS GOWN IS ITS LITTLE BOLERO WHICH IS MADE WITH A RUFFLE AROUND THE ELBOW AND IS CUT AWAY IN FRONT AND MATCHES THE SKIRT WITH ITS FLOWERS IN APPLIQUE

A GOWN OF SHIRRED LAWN IS TRIMMED WITH AN APPLICATION OF GRAPES IN BUNCHES WHICH EXTEND FROM THE SHOULDER DOWN TO THE TRAIN OF THE GOWN.

FOR A WOMAN WHO WANTS TO LENGTHEN HER FIGURE THERE COME BEAUTIFUL STRIPED MATERIALS TO BE USED WITH DOTTED STUFFS AND LACE. THESE MAKE VERY NICE AFTERNOON AND EVENING GOWNS.

A PRINCESS GOWN BUTTONNED DOWN THE BACK AND TRIMMED WITH A BEADED CORSAGE DECORATION. THE SLEEVES ARE IN FULL PUFFS AT THE ELBOW AND THE GOWN IS VERY STRAIGHT IN CUT DOWN THE FRONT BREADTH.

THE GOWN WITHOUT A STOCK FINISHED WITH A LITTLE LACE IN THE NECK, WILL BE WORN THIS SUMMER AND, ON MANY OF THE NEW GOWNS, THERE IS VERY LITTLE TRIMMING EXCEPT TUCKING AND TINY RUFFLES OR ROWS OF LACE.

COMING SEASON MATERIALS

Gowns Will Be Trimmed With Many Flounces, and Sleeves and Neck Will Be Gauzy and Fairylike. White Cloth for Little Women. Big Buttons.

Special Correspondence Sunday Gazette by ADELE PIERROT.

NEW YORK, Feb. 7.—The summer girl is on the way, coming hard and fast toward us. She is wearing some of her summer clothing now, or clothing which looks as though it might be worn in summer; and what she does not wear she carries in her arms.

She is out shopping and heavily laden and she brings her purchases home at nightfall.

And what is she buying, the coming summer girl?

For one thing, she is buying flowers, not by the half-dozen, but by the mass. She is getting great bunches of these upon the bargain counter and wherever they may be found. And with her purchases she will make an Easter boa, an Easter muff and an Easter hat. Besides these articles, all of which she will construct from her floral purchases, she will make an Easter chou, all ribbon with flowers in the middle, and, maybe, she will take a few of the flowers and, pressing them flat, applique her Easter gown of cloth, and press flowers into the lace of her yoke.

The flowers which she selects are violets, which make such a pretty thatch to a hat. Or she selects the brilliant scarlet geraniums, which, with their flaming colors, look so beautiful with a border of green leaves.

In the floral kingdom, as represented by the shop counter, there is a nameless little white flower which is good for spring trimmings, and there are orchids which are pulled apart and the petals twisted and tied into boas. The Easter gown will be a great product of the floral kingdom and the spring shopper cannot do better than invest in as many floral decorations as she can find, for there will be room for them all.

New Materials.

Yet the Easter gown will not be a fantastic one, by any means, and for those who do not go in for floral effects there are other ones just exactly as good.

In the new fabrics there is a tan color which is of a soft, delicate shade, no deeper than mode color, and so smooth that it looks like the side of a peach. This is one of the best of all materials for an Easter Sunday gown, and it may be pleasant to know that Mrs. Andrew Carnegie has a gown made of this lovely tan color and that it is trimmed with Paris lace of almost the same shade, a faint mode.

When buying your Easter cloth gown remember that it is the fashion to trim the dress with lace, either white or very nearly the same shade as the gown, and do not neglect to purchase as much lace as you can afford.

There is no rule for the quality of lace that goes upon the spring gown. It is used at the neck to make a deep collar and the long points are brought down so as to trim the front of the waist and also the back of it.

Again the lace is used upon the hips and, if possible, the long points are brought down on the skirt until they nearly touch the flounce. This pointed treatment makes as handsome a skirt trimming as one could wish to see.

The amateur dressmaker can construct herself an Easter suit, almost without difficulty, if she will buy a few yards of this very wide lace and use it as a hip trimming with the points coming down very long on the skirt.

The foot of the skirt can be trimmed with a graded flounce rising high in the back and growing narrow in the front.

The skirt flounce has not gone out though you will read so sometimes. The truth of the matter is that it is almost impossible to replace the skirt flounce with anything half as becoming as the flounce is; and the modistes are very loath to give up anything which is such an assistance to them.

And that is the reason why the flare flounce, with its band of silk or its band of cloth, and its heading of silk trimming, is seen upon so many of the newly imported French gowns.

Coming Skirt.

But there are a great many Easter skirts that are made without the flounce. And these are the skirts that are tucked from the belt downward. Also around the figure, with the plaits released only at the foot of the gown, to make the cascade around the foot.

Again there is the perfectly plain Langtry skirt which is intended to show off the figure and which is cut without flounce or flare and without trimming of any kind.

The perfectly plain skirt is becoming to the girl of medium height. It is made with slot seams and with a great many gores. The slot seams, themselves, make a sort of trimming, and the skirt is, of course, cut and stiffened so that it makes its flare around the foot even without the flounce.

If a skirt be cut perfectly plain it must be very long indeed, and at the back there must be a wide strapping which extends from the belt right down to the tail of the dress. This wide slat of cloth looks fetching upon the gown, as it gives that flat look at the back which is so much sought now by fashion's devotees, and also finishes the gown and conceals the opening which is closed with very many hooks.

If a skirt be handsome there is nothing nicer than this perfectly plain treatment and no better way of showing off a good figure.

A tall woman in society who is now attracting a great deal of attention by her novel gowns has invented a way of showing off her height. It is such a good one that it can be recommended to the short woman, for it is as well adapted to her as to her tall sisted.

The waist is a lovely conception in black taffeta, with a shirt waist of white or black or tan-colored lace to wear over it. This shirt waist is perfectly plain nd the only suspicion of trimming is seen in the sleeves which bag at the wrists, falling in a long melon-shaped pouch.

Pearl gray is another spring color and it is used with a deep gray panne or with a deep gray cloth. Panne cloth will be worn a great deal this Easter, as will panne silk and all the panne materials, including a lovely new panne chiffon. These are made up with taffeta and are among the stunning creations which will grace Fifth avenue Easter Sunday.

The Color Idea.

In selecting her Easter gown, a woman is much perplexed over the color scheme. It is as difficult as her decision upon the material, and perhaps a little more trying.

The materials are so beautiful and so numerous that one can scarcely go wrong, for each has a virtue of its own.

Just at the dawn of spring it is considered a little dressier to wear the soft full-of-luster cloths, rather than the rough materials; and so one's Easter, tailor-made gown should be of a brilliant finish and should bear upon its surface that indescribable look which reminds one of kid but which is an attribute of the new suede cloths which are now flooding the market.

If one does not want suede cloth, thinking it too expensive there are the satin cloths which are always admirable. And, back of these loom up the silky vellings, some of them quite heavy, and the army of cashmeres and albatross cloths, silk flannels and the novelty materials all with a high smooth surface.

But, when it comes to selecting the proper colors to wear, the woman of taste is all at sea. There are so many that are good that she is bewildered in a sea of color. In perplexity she flees to the navy blue counter, only to find that even here there is a wide choice, for, with navy blue, there now come the loveliest Grecian plaids and Persian stuffs which make the most charming trimmings in the world.

They take brilliant navy blue cloth of satin face and make it up with a plaid. Shepherd's plaid, in blue and white makes a favorable trimming, which is sought by women who look for something not very conspicuous.

White Cloth Gown.

White is so very much in the mode this season that it is a pity not to own a white costume, and the girl who goes in society, as well as the young matron, is really entitled to one.

A white cloth gown for the use of the little woman has its many advantages. While it may soil in time, it keeps clean one season, and, on every occasion, it looks nice. Moreover the woman who is shy of inches, not too tall to be graceful, can always wear the white gown with propriety and, upon every occasion, except a shopping one, she is well dressed.

Fine Lawns and Their Cousins.

The trimmed skirts are much worn and nice they look. In the summer materials there is a special vogue for trimming and skirts have from one to four flounces, enough to make them light and fluffy and pretty.

The printed materials are best treated in this fashion and you have the pretty spectacle of a little light challie, with tiny flowers scattered through it, trimmed with two flounces around the bottom and made with a waist that is nothing more nor less than a shirt waist.

The design upon which the imported printed gowns are made is the simplest of all designs, for the treatment is such that it could be followed by any woman who can handle a needle.

It is said that the shirred skirt is coming, and indeed, one can believe it by looking at the new French summer gown—dress that is lovely has for its ground-work a little printed material that looks like fine lawn and feels like chambray; it is almost crisp and scattered over with prim little empire bouquets with a little wreath around each.

The gown is gathered upon the waistband and below the waist it is shirred in fine shirrings to below the hips. This is all done upon a foundation so that it does not materially increase the size of the hips.

The skirt below this hangs quite straight to the very end of the train, which is a sweeping one, ending in a deep flounce.

One is looking for a return to the short skirt, but the suspicion of it has not yet dawned upon an expectant world. Skirts are still made in three lengths. One is the long, sweeping skirt which drags upon the floor and must be held up front and back. In the street it is a terrible nuisance, unless one rides, but in the drawing room it is not so bad. The second style of skirt is the walking length which needs to be held up with one hand and for this there are the tucked skirts, the flounce skirts and the skirts with their box-plaited trimmings.

THE BEAUTY QUEST

A Well-Modulated Voice, a Powerful Feminine Charm Even More Fascinating Than a Beautiful Face—Training That Will Overcome Defects and Render Unpleasant Tones Pure and Sweet—Vocal and Other Exercises.

By KATHERINE MORTON.

(Copyright, 1902, by T. C. McClure.)
(Written for The Sunday Gazette.)

IT IS only between the covers of a book that one comes across just the right kind of a voice—flexible, vibrant, caressing, tender, poetic. It is, of course, accompanied by a nose that is a dream, flashing eyes, a rosebud mouth and a seashell ear, but the greatest charm of all is the voice. It has a witchery all its own.

How shall the maiden without becoming a heroine become possessed of the kind of a voice that bewitches one, euphonious, pure, sweet and crystalline?

There are several methods suggested, but that which particularly commends itself to the debutante of the season has a classic flavor and gives her an opportunity to make a picture of herself.

She orders a loose, clinging gown of softest material and subdued, becoming tone; she arranges her boudoir to suit her classic style of garment, and then she practices on what are known as pipes of Pan.

"Pan didn't really have such a pipe," she explains to a friend who is being initiated into the mysteries, "but it sounds well, you know. Or perhaps, it is more like a Fra Angelica angel—I cannot quite make out."

"And I suppose it really doesn't matter whether you are like a Pan piping, or an angel making melody?"

"No, not in the least, just so I finally succeeded in exchanging my dull tones for musical ones."

To Have a Good Voice.

Any girl who has a small brother possessed of a large horn can solve the problem. She takes the correct standing position and blows the horn, breathing from the abdomen. A coaching horn is an admirable developer of contralto tones.

There is one great comfort that, although we may not have a tuneful voice, it can, to a certain extent, be cultivated, at all events so far as to make it sufficiently melodious to sound well, even if it does not possess a great variety of inflection and carezzando quality. No special gift is needed to begin with; even the most serious defects of articulation may be corrected by faithful work.

A well-moderated voice is largely a matter of breathing. Learn to breathe first, then cultivate semi-rythmic intonations with which to charm the ear.

In the pipe exercise the lungs must be filled with air, which is then gradually expelled. It is really a breathing exercise with the pipe, but one which is more easily practiced than simply inhaling and exhaling, because there is the charm of novelty and picturesqueness about it.

The exercise broadens and expands the chest and develops the muscles of throat and neck.

There are some exercises which should always be preliminary to this method of voice culture. Here are a few:

Standing in the correct position, rise slowly on the toes, and then gradually sink down again, keeping the weight always forward.

Accompanying this exercise now and then by raising the arms when you rise on the toes and slowly inhale at the same time. Lower the arms, expel the breath and sink to the normal position. Repeat the exercise a number of times, 15 or 20, at least. Stand easily, with flexible, relaxed muscles.

Inhale deeply through the nostrils and exhale through the mouth. While exhaling raise the arms straight out and up at the side to shoulder level, and while exhaling lower the arms again to the side. The arm action expands the floating ribs and so cultivates intercostal breathing.

Breathing Is Everything.

When using the horn or pipe breathe naturally, but as deeply as possible. Fifteen or 20 minutes' practice is quite enough for the daily allowance.

Frequent exercises at short intervals produce the best results. Never strain or tire the voice. Common sense is as important a quality in training the voice as it is in every other pursuit.

After laying aside the pipes, an excellent exercise is to focus the voice through a circle formed by bringing the thumb and forefingers together. At first do this with the circle directly before the mouth; then remove the thumb and fingers about two inches away from the lips. Direct the tone through the center, speaking as if to some point beyond.

Open the mouth wide, up and down, so to speak; then from side to side. After drawing in a full, deep breath, select a difficult word of several syllables and pronounce each syllable with perceptible effort of the lips, tongue and teeth.

Take the word xanthophyline, for example, in default of a more difficult one, for the first trial. Do not push the sound out with the throat, but enunciate clearly with the lips.

When taking your lessons in tone or voice culture, hold up your head, open your mouth and throat, and let the tone gush forth, if not like the song of a bird, at least in as dulcet tones as you can command. Think of pleasant things.

This advice may very well be taken by the singer. Position particularly is everything, if one is to get the full value of every note. The pose should be erect, with the music held a little above the level of the waist line.

It is a matter of fact that cheerful folk usually have melodious voices. With the light of happiness in your eyes and on your lips, your voice should be sweet and smooth. If you have a bad temper, or are angry or worried or discontented, you will probably have a harsh, rasping discordant voice, or speak with a whine.

We judge character by the voice; temperament, disposition and motive are measured by their outward expressions. If these expressions be abrupt and unattractive, the person will be exposed to the same verdict. When the voice changes and becomes refined and gentle in manner, the verdict will be changed.

Voices can surely be made over. What training did for the great actress Rachel we all know. At the outset of her career she was handicapped by a harsh, rasping voice. When she was at the height of her career it was described as marvelous. "It ran along your nerves like an electric shock. Then again it was so deep—so grave—so solemn, like the music in a cathedral. Such enunciation—no syllable was ever lost. Sit where you would, each word perfect—polished—full of meaning, came safely, musically, to your ear."

Actresses' Voices Made Over.

The actresses of the present day are many of them possessed of remarkable voices. Duse, like Rachel, is an example of what patient drilling can do for an organ not naturally beautiful. The sincerity of her utterance is poignant and euphonious. Bernhardt is golden-tongued. Ellen Terry's voice is charming and caressing. Mrs. Patrick Campbell's voice has a slightly veiled, delicious quality. Mary Mannering's is the "dark" voice; the voice for sustained, though languorous, sentiment. It comforts the ear. Mrs. Fiske's voice has grown darker, heavier, though it has lost none of the old-time suppleness. It is better adapted now to the expression of tragic terror, and the semi-rythmic intonations.

Christine Nilsson has a curious theory that flowers affect the voice. When she was singing she would not tolerate them in her apartment. Calve has a particular aversion to violets, on account of their injurious influence.

That violets should have an effect upon the voice is a curious thing, but many singers think that they cause hoarseness. The great baritone Faure, who wrote a book on the hygiene of the voice, calls the violet one of the greatest enemies of the voice, ranking it with alcohol and tobacco. A French physician, Cabanes, gives an interesting example of the effects of violets on the human voice.

"At a soiree in Paris," he says, "the celebrated singer Marie Sasse was presented with a large bouquet of Parma violets, which had been sprinkled with a concentrated extract of the same flower. She was fond of violets, and inhaled the perfume eagerly. Presently she attempted to sing and found that her voice was entirely gone. Her vocal chords were, for the time, completely paralyzed."

Another interesting theory is that certain essences will give certain qualities and capacities to the voice. This is of importance to embryo Pattis. The theory is that, in order to modify the sounds of the human voice, one has only to inhale the vapors of certain liquids and essences. Thus, inhalation of curacao will raise the voice two notes; essence extracted from pines will give two low notes; the inspiration of creme de menthe will add one high and two low notes.

An Awful Jolt.

He (bashfully)—May I—er—kiss your baby sister?

She (in disgust)—Oh, I suppose so—if you are too cowardly to tackle a girl nearer your own size.

A VALENTINE.

Oh! Montmorency Vere de Vere,
To think that one I held so dear,
Should use a base deceiver's art
To trifle with my loving heart.

A brand new ten-cent valentine
With lace and hearts and verses fine,
I sent to show my love for thee,
And in return you send to me
The one I sent to you last year,
Oh! Montmorency Vere de Vere.

—Ellis Parker Butler in Leslie's.

A STUNNING TOILETTE

ST. VALENTINE'S DAY IN THE LONG AGO

By ADRIENNE PEEBLES.

THERE is just time between this date and Valentine's Day for preparations for the festivities.

The most appropriate valentine invitations are issued in the shape of hearts, but lover's knots, wedding rings and bells all find favor with those who desire novel designs. Once the invitations are issued the confectioner can provide materials for a jolly heart hunt and small candy hearts may be distributed all over the house. Of course, the more original the idea for an entertainment the better hostess one proves herself. Cotillion favors come in the shape of flowers whose meaning is explained on a tiny slip of paper hidden among the green leaves, and as the paper is unrolled in the presence of one's partner, great fun ensues. A pink carnation, for instance, means woman's love, and the sentiment thus freely expressed causes merriment when a chance coincidence turns out to be truth.

Archery is another game which finds favor among the young folks who take turns at shooting tiny arrows provided by the hostess at a red heart pinned on the wall. After all have had a chance the punctured heart is examined and the one who hit nearest the middle is sure of a wedding within the year. If the arrows of a young man or woman go into the same place they are destined to become life partners. One hostess has arranged a guessing contest and has ransacked collections of poetry for quotations concerning broken attachments. The name of the hero is then written upon one slip of paper and given the men, who are expected to find their valentines by the names on the women's papers, and thus unite in sentiment the loves that were broken in fiction. In fact, Valentine's Day is full of suggestion for the clever hostess who uses her own ingenuity since the custom of exchanging valentines has fallen into disuse, for there are few people who buy the lace and fancy paper missives which used to fill the shops.

There is, however, little reason to suppose the merry feast will ever die as long as hearts are young and men and women live. One of the oldest festivals on the calendar, it can be traced back to the thirteenth century in England, and there is good reason to think that some of the peculiar customs were taken from the Roman Lupercalia. The saint himself was a priest of Rome martyred in the third century the greater part of his remains are preserved in the church of St. Praxides at Rome, the gate to which is called Porta Valentine), but he seems to have had little to do with the day. It was the practice in ancient Rome during February to celebrate feasts in honor of June and it is reasonable to suppose that the occasion gradually became reciprocated in the sexes and that the person chosen on that day would be valentine from the day on which the ceremony took place.

Great excitement always ensued in the lottery which was in vogue in the seventeenth century, by which each girl drew some young man who was to be her valentine for that year. A number of maids and men would form a party, taking care that there should be an equal number of couples, and each would write his or her true or feigned name upon a billet. All these billets would be rolled up and every girl drew a man's slip, every man a girl's slip, so that each of the young girls drew a man and each of the men a girl. In this manner each would have two valentines, but every man was obliged to hold to the girl who had drawn him in preference to the one he himself had drawn. Fortune having thus divided the couples, the young man would wear his sweetheart's name on his sleeve for several days. Many expensive presents were exchanged among valentines and a London gentleman of the time ruefully relates how he was drawn as valentine by his own wife, "but," he adds naively, "she would have cost me five pounds in any case."

The common people always thought that the day had a great influence in deciding whom one should marry, and people imagined that a mystic something was inherent in the day. It was supposed, for instance, that the first unmarried person of the other sex whom one met on Valentine's Day early in the morning walking abroad was a destined husband or wife. Great ingenuity was used to discover one's affinity and the pinning of four bay leaves to the corners of a pillow with one in the middle was a sure determiner of proper dreams. Another means for the fair one to decide the important question was to write the names of several suitors on bits of paper and let chance decide which she should pick up first.

A young lady of 1750 who kept a quaint diary wrote: "Last Friday was Valentine's Day and the night before I got five bay leaves and pinned four of them to the four corners of my pillow and the fifth in the middle, and then, if I dreamed of my sweetheart, Betty said we should be married before the year was out. But to make more sure, I boiled an egg very hard and took out the yolk and filled it with salt, and when I went to bed ate it, shell and all, without speaking or drinking after it. We also wrote our lovers' names upon bits of paper and rolled them up in clay and put them into water, and the first that rose up was to be our valentine. Would you think it? Mr. Blossom was my man. I lay in bed and shut my eyes all the morning until he came to our house, for I would not have seen another man before him for the world."

The custom of giving presents on Valentine's Day has largely died out. Merchants formerly kept valentines by the thousands and always laid in a stock of pretty presents. Valentine emblems, hearts and cupids in store windows may still foretell what is coming, but the Valentine Day of our grandmothers has gone—the day when eyes brightened at the entrance of lace and gilt paper confections decorated with appropriate mottoes which spoke well for loyalty and devotion.

VALENTINES

By ELLIOTT RANDALL.

EVERY year brings forth new designs, skits, etc., in Valentines as well as in Christmas, New Year and Easter cards.

The artistic valentine is made of leather with a Cupid and bow etched or burnt upon it. There come wooden valentines to be painted with the poker or painted with the brush. These are round and heavy and are meant to be hung upon the wall.

The little lace paper creations are seen also; and the lace valentine is one of the pretty things which may come to you on next Valentine's Day.

The accepted way to give a valentine is to lay it upon the front stoop and to ring the bell and run. But in these latter days the valentine travels by post, or if very large and very frail, very elegant and very important, it comes to you by the hand of the messenger boy.

Often it contains a note; and the boy waits while "the lady" reads it and sends back the answer.

That is proposing a la mode; and legend has it that it has worked in more cases than one.

In society the valentine is sent in artistic form, as a souvenir; and as a little remembrance in between the Christmas gift and the Easter token.

HOME

By WILL S. GREENLIEF.

When the birds have ceased their singing, sought the shelter of the nest,
And just a touch of gleaming marks the skyline in the west
When the lengthening shadows darken all the landscape far and near,
Then to me the world seems lonely and my heart turns sad and drear;
Comes a thought in retrospection of the happy days of yore,
And the twilight finds me longing to be at Home once more.

O to be at Home once more, just to be at Home once more;
What happiness awaits me there, what joy awaits me in store.
To wander in familiar paths and down the shady lane,
Keeping step in boyish gladness to some sweet old time refrain,
To lift the latch and enter at the wide old-fashioned door,
There to meet the kiss of mother and be at Home once more.

The place is changed; reflection tells me it is lone and still;
Yet I love it, my affection lingers there and always will,
Not a place have I forgotten 'round the old home farm,
Age will never dim remembrance, time can never efface the charm
Of the hills, the fields, the meadows, and I'd love to trudge them o'er
Just a happy little barefoot boy—at Home once more.

O to be at Home once more—Just to be at Home once more,
What happiness awaits me there, what joy for me in store,
To wander in familiar paths and down the shady lane;
Keeping step in boyish gladness to some sweet old time refrain,
To lift the latch and enter at the wide old-fashioned door,
And to hear the voice of mother, "Welcome Home, my boy," once more.

THE DAY'S WAGES.

Love wore a suit of bedlam gray
And toiled within the fields all day.

Love wielded pick and carried pack
And bent to heavy loads his back.

Though meager fed and sorely lashed,
The only wage Love ever asked,

A child's wan face to kiss at night,
A woman's face by candle light.

CHARACTER FROM PHOTOGRAPHS Concluded. By MADAME VERA

J. P.—You did not send photo.

BUTLER 21—An annoying temper. You feel constantly that you are being imposed upon.

E. L. H.—A desire to conquer something. Misery and discontented. Crafty and designing.

J. M. W.—The head of a scientist. Research is a pleasure to you. Calm, dispassionate disposition.

DOLLY.—A student, self conscious, deliberate, artistic, truthful, with a love for art, music and literature.

C. B., Hannibal, O.—Conscientious, steady, will make a teacher. Art instinct strong. Industrious student.

656, ROCHESTER—Independent and full of spirit. Pickle at heart; fond of amusements and social gaieties. Miserly.

DOROTHY.—A dreamer, always yearning for the forbidden or unattainable. Not careful of what you read. Nature full of smoldering fires.

HELIOTROPE—Strong will and an ability to manage anything from a husband to a railroad. Settled in your opinions. Skeptical and tight-fisted.

909.—Vivacious, ebullient nature, good taste, fond of admiration, art instinct, industrious and courageous. Fickle, imaginative, high temper.

M. A. X.—A very sweet and sympathetic nature is indicated by this girl's face. She is passionately fond of music, and may succeed as an instrumentalist, for she possesses power of work, energy, and absence of all sensuous love of luxury. She is ambitious and very original; so she will probably do well in her career. Her sensitiveness will be useful to her in her profession, but she must try and repress it in the ordinary affairs of life. She is highly conscientious and very truthful.

E. L. H.—Homestead—Industrious, careful, a man to be trusted. Generous and self-sacrificing, honest and loyal.

J. J. R.—Reverence and devotion strong. You may grace a pulpit some day. Ideality and generosity prominent.

RUBEN—A healthy mentality. Expert as a manager. Can drive a good bargain. Heart affairs do not trouble you.

ADA, SISTERSVILLE.—Parsimonious, able to manage, courageous and determined. Not partial to social festivities. A good cook.

A. E. B.—A faithful, devoted housewife strong maternal instinct. Artistic taste in fixing up a home. Something of a gossip.

VIOLET—This girl is impulsive, hot-tempered, and self-willed, but she is warmly affectionate, frank of speech, and straightforward in her actions. She is luxurious in her tastes, and is vain and very fond of dress. She is jealous and exacting in her love affairs, and is inclined to be distrustful and unhopeful, as regards any undertaking suggested to her.

203.—Delicacy of perception, refinement of feeling and idealism are the salient features of this girl's face. She is over-sensitive and would be jealous and exacting where she loves; but she herself is capable of a strong and very deep-seated attachment. The mobile lips indicate tenderness, sympathy and fluent speech, and the slightly dimpled chin, love of luxury. She possesses much sense of honor and her courage and will power are both strong.

H. J. L.—Plenty of nerve. Would make a successful solicitor or salesman. Vainglorious and reckless.

E. L. K.—A lazy, sleepy, dreamy nature. Bohemian in tastes. Latent ability in plenty, if you ever wake up.

M., Gallitzin—Imaginative, easily imposed upon. Great charity worker, not constant in affection.

E. M. R.—Vivacious, merry, talkative, active brain, can master things. Fond of the opposite sex.

66.—Observation, decision and frankness are here shown. This girl—though sweet-tempered and unselfish—knows what she wants and generally manages to get it. As she grows older and her judgment ripens with the experience of life, she will be an invaluable wife to any young man beginning his career without any help from relatives—for she is economical and practical.

EVELYN, 33.—Gentle temper, love of home and family life, truthfulness and a certain decision which is often seen in these unselfish and quiet natures, are shown by this girl's portrait. She is very unaffected and unselfish. She is fond of luxury and has much artistic perception of beauty, both in art and nature. She has much charm of manner. She is fond of music, but she has not enough power of work to pursue the art as a career.

A. B. C.—This face shows dignity, refinement of taste, and intellectuality. The nature is highly sensitive, and the mobile lips indicate fluent speech, amounting to eloquence on subjects of personal interest. This correspondent is vividly intuitive and—for her extreme impressionability—she is a person of varied moods, sometimes in bright spirits and at others unduly depressed. The eyebrows show jealousy and constancy.

O. C. N.—You lean to the military. Strong, commanding nature. Could be extremely cruel without a pang.

MAR.—Fiery temper, dissatisfied, discontented. Fond of admiration. Fickle?

J. J. C.—The form of the head and forehead shows sense of honor, courage and observation. The temper is hasty and the eyebrows show jealousy. The subject is fond of sport and is energetic in his pursuit of it. He possesses much self-assertion and has a decided will. The lips show love of material comfort, and the chin, generosity. He might be fortunate in anything to do with horses. He should succeed as a soldier, an engineer or a surgeon.

M.—1906—Gentle temper and very unselfish nature are here indicated, but this girl is quite wanting in force of character. Her nature is melancholic, and she rarely forms any decided opinion on any subject. She is gifted with feeling for music, but she has no energy, and will never work up what is her only talent. She is indolent, and procrastination is her special weakness.

PRIDE.

I weep not for the grief of man,
His grandeur that I see;
But oh! the pathos of his pride
Could break the heart in me!

—Winifred Webb.

THE LATEST CAPRICE OF FASHION ✦ THE FAD OF COLLECTING CANDLESTICKS

By AMY SEVILLE WOLFF.

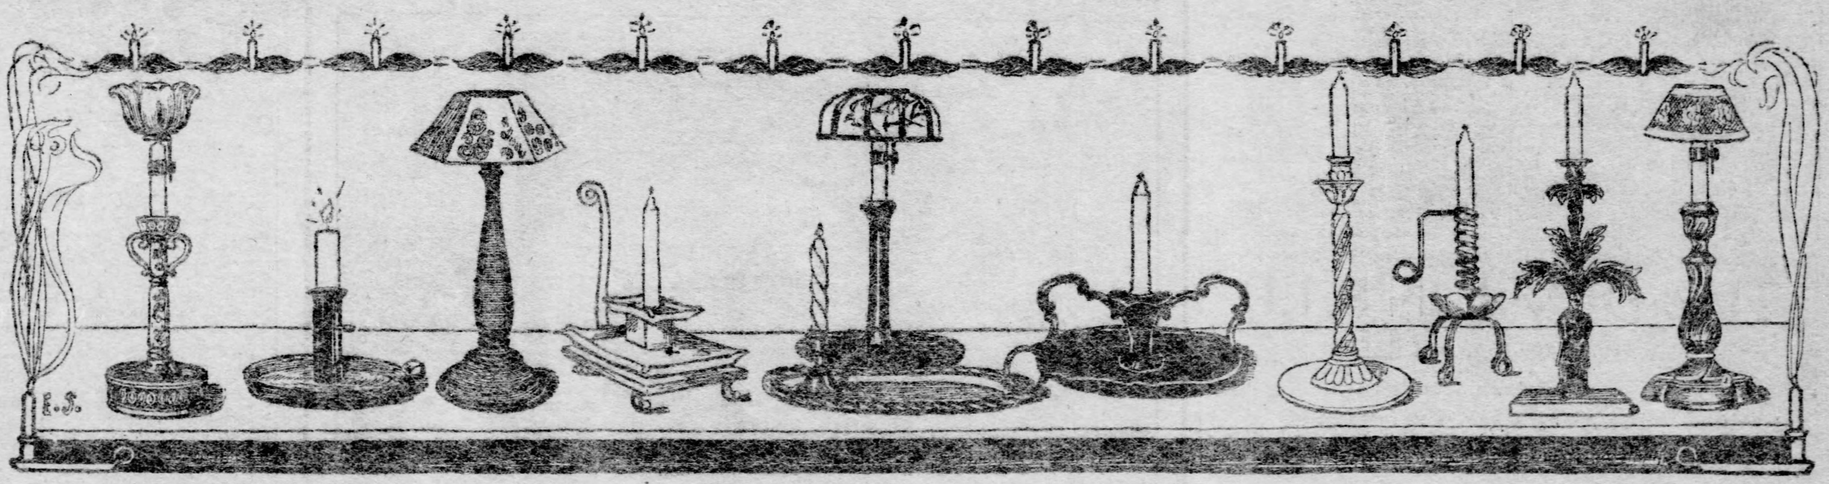
AND now the girl who knows what's what has taken to collecting candlesticks. This is the latest fad in collections. If you have given no particular thought to the subject, you might imagine that it is a hobby of decided limitations, but begin to collect, and you will soon find that there are more kinds of candlesticks than the average woman ever dreams of.

Of course the older the candlesticks the better. Most of the prized are the antiques in varying materials from brass, black with age, to iron, wood, silver, or the dauntly scintillating prisms of colonial times. Junk, antique and art shops are being scoured by enthusiastic devotees of the latest fad.

Of Tin.

But by no means to be despised are the modern candlesticks, if sufficiently old, and if one took to gathering nothing but up-to-date specimens, the possibilities for collecting are unlimited. The candlesticks shown in the big shops are in styles too many, and materials too numerous to describe. They are of tin, nickel, brass, bronze, iron, wood, glass, pewter, silver and copper, and of each of these there are many kinds. Even the ordinary, everyday affair of tin comes in a multitude of styles, ranging from the plain, practical household requisite of tin pure and simple, that makes no attempt at good looks, to the more pretentious affairs of tin enamelled in bright red, green, pink or blue, which are imported from Germany.

Many of the tin candlesticks are, in shape, just like those our great-grandmothers used in the palmy days of the tallow dip. One of the most striking of the old-fashioned styles is of Japanned tin, in which the candlestick stands in the center of a bowl as large as a pudding dish having a handle at one side. The big dish precluded any possibility of a drop of tallow leaving its desecrating mark on table or floor, which was its strong point of merit in the favor of the punctilious old-time housekeepers. Some of the patterns of our kitchen candlesticks, like the new ultra-fashionable styles of our table candelabra, have been handed down from colonial times, but other candlesticks testify at once of their up-to-dateness by the numerous patent improvements in the devices for holding and adjusting the candle, and the union of the old and the new eras of illumination are symbolized in a candlestick which combines a support for the tallow dip and a receptacle for the box of safety matches.



About the most pretentious creation in tin is the smoker's candlestick of enameled tin in bright red with brass trimmings. It is a yard high, having a circular base from which rises a long pleader shaft, at the top of which is a tray-like arrangement which serves as an ash receiver, and also supports the candlestick, while attached to one side is a receptacle for the box of safety matches.

From tin, one ascends through various degrees to nickel, and then to ornamental iron and brass. The candlesticks for the single candle wrought in ornamental iron, are manifestly designed with a view to decorative appearance. Flowers and foliage are utilized in odd effects and unusual designs. An artistic iron candlestick is in the form of a water lily; the broad leaf makes the stand, and coiling up from that in graceful curves the stem ends in the blossom itself as the holder for the handle is reached.

The candlesticks of gilt are very showy, the designs run more to the ornate. Cut crystal is combined with gilt with handsome results. A fashionable type of candelabrum is a reproduction of a Greek column, the shaft being of crystal, the pedestal of gilt and the gilt Corinthian capital richly ornamented with the acanthus, supporting the candle.

Crystal candelabra are a fad of the moment. Many beautiful pieces are shown, but the colonial candlesticks are the most sought-after of all. Not in a good many years has the colonial style in house decorations had such a vogue as it is having now, but fashion has put her approving seal on everything colonial from the big brass knocker which goes on the remodelled colonial front door to the silver for the sideboard and the candelabra for the table. The colonial designs are to the fore in silver, and we are even having reproductions of pieces used on George Washington's table. The colonial candlesticks are charming in silver, severely simple, dignified, graceful, with no attempt at ornamentation except a mere line of beading, but doubly fascinating are they in glass. Happy the possessor of genuine heirlooms which did duty in the days before oil, gas, not to mention electricity, were ever dreamed of. But if the antiques are not forthcoming, one can buy the exact modern reproductions. The colonial glass candlesticks are very quaint, graceful and pleasing. The designs are marked by absolute simplicity, the glass being usually cut prism fashion, but art is apparent in the symmetrical lines and harmonious shapes.

There are some very tall candelabra in old English style, for single candles, of finely cut rock crystal that are very very alluring to those that follow the fad of candlestick collecting. These have a long, slender shaft which springs from a circular base; a little glass drop-cup is at the top.

In glass alone, the candlestick presents itself in many artistic guises, but at present those in Venetian glass and Bohemian glass are especially in vogue. One encounters very beautiful effects in the colored Venetian glass, and a display of Bohemian glass offers many temptations to the collector. There are charming candlesticks in the white crystal delicately enriched with graceful traceries in gold, and others of colored glass, in ruby, sapphire and emerald effects. Nor are the candlesticks of Favrile and the new iridescent glasses to be ignored by the lover of the artistic.

Of Fine China.

The woman who starts out to investigate the subject of candlesticks will quickly discover that a large collection can be built up from those of fine china alone. All the world-famous potteries may be represented by characteristic examples. She can start with our own beautiful Rookwood and select a candlestick of the dark Rookwood, with its rich, warm shades of brown, with a suggestion of red or yellow, finished with the splendid lustrous glaze that is the glory of this characteristically American ware, and she can add a candlestick in one of the series of light arrangements known as "Iris" or "Sea Green," the latter reminding one of the color of the sea. Among the productions of the potteries of the old world, she can pick up some charming examples of the dainty posy-pied Dresden, of Delft—the popular blue china and the less familiar inlaid ware—a bit of Haviland, a cream and gold candlestick in Limoges, or one of the grotesque candlesticks in French pottery, for instance a grotesque frog, very true to life in its hue of emerald green, holding over its head a lily leaf done in dull blue, which serves as a holder for the candle.

Of the English wares there are Doulton, Minton, Crown Derby and Royal Worcester to select from. Some charming candlesticks are in the solid pink, red, yellow and green of Crown Derby, with only delicate lines of gold for ornamentation. Of Royal Worcester, a pretty candlestick is in the two tones of ivory characteristic of the ware with gold enrichment. A candlestick or two may be added of the old Italian Cantagalli ware, with its soft, yellow coloring. China and Japan swell the list of ceramics available for the candlestick collector, with many varieties. Side by side with the familiar blue and white Nanking, we encounter some charmingly decorative candlesticks in the Japanese ceramics. It must be confessed that the pieces of Goroguki, Oribe and Awaji wares are very much more beautiful than their names.

Of the Awaji, the scarlet ware is the very latest thing and extremely decorative. There are, too, some alluring candlesticks of Awaji in a rich, emerald green.

Japan adds to the variety of her display with candlesticks of wood, carved and lacquered, and other decorative designs in brass. From the land of the chrysanthemum come also the new geisha shades for candelabra made of rich paper mounted on lacquered bamboo frames, and decorated characteristically by native Japanese artists. The cosmopolitan character of the collection may be increased with oddly artistic wood and brass candlesticks of East Indian origin.

Of Silver.

Silver opens still another field of varied possibilities, among which the collector of candlesticks may browse with artistic results. As has been suggested, the colonial silver candelabra have decidedly the lead. But the designs are many. Candlesticks of striking air resemble a column from some classic Greek edifice reproduced in miniature in silver. From the severely simple Colonial we pass to the highly ornate Georgian and the silver candlesticks from the land of windmills and dykes which are quite as quaint as is the rest of the silver from the kingdom of the little Dutch queen.

The American Madame Blavatsky and Her Temple of Mystery

LOMA LAND ORCHESTRA, IN WHICH ARE SOME OF THE RAJA YOGA CHILDREN

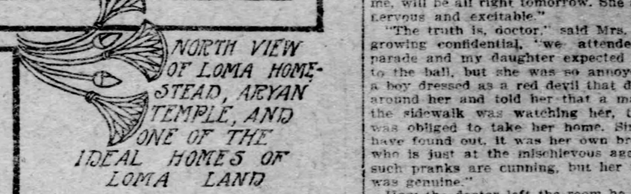
SINGING CLASS IN ARYAN TEMPLE OF MUSIC AND ART.

MRS. KATHERINE TINGLEY.

A FAMILY GROUP OF TINY LOTUS BUDS WITH HON EMILO BACARDI SR. ORTEZ AND DR C.J. LOPEZ OF CUBA.

MRS. O. PETERSON, HOSTESS AND CUBAN GUESTS HON EMILO BACARDI, MAYOR OF SANTIAGO DE CUBA SR. ORTEZ OF EL CUBANO LIBRE, AND MEMBERS OF CABINET OF UNIVERSAL BROTHERHOOD.

ENTRANCE TO RAJA YOGA SCHOOL AT POINT LOMA CALIFORNIA.



NORTH VIEW OF LOMA HOMESTEAD, ARYAN TEMPLE, AND ONE OF THE IDEAL HOMES OF LOMA LAND

SAN DIEGO, CAL., Feb. 1.—The fact that Mrs. Katherine Tingley, who admits that she is the autocratic head of the Universal Brotherhood society and supreme ruler of the Raja Yoga school at Point Loma, Cal., has within the last six years gathered to her organization great wealth and power, is explained by the remarkable personality of this woman, who would have succeeded in any enterprise to which she set herself. Although those who have been expelled from the Theosophical society assert that, inasmuch as Mrs. Tingley first appeared on earth 1200 B. C., she has had ample time to acquire a knowledge of human nature which would qualify her to rule even the destinies of Loma Land, yet her experience in life as ordinary mortals know it has been unusual.

In the libel suit brought by Mrs. Tingley against a Pacific Coast paper, and which has just resulted in a $7,500 verdict in her favor, the evidence established many weird customs and strange beliefs at the Raja Yoga school.

A number of wild newspaper stories, containing not a scintilla of truth, have gone the rounds of the press since the Gerry society of New York first investigated the Raja Yoga school. All charges of cruelty and harsh conduct toward the inmates of this institution have been dispelled. The little army of children and members of the Theosophical cult, who are absolutely under Mrs. Tingley's rule seem well, happy and even prosperous.

The keynote of Theosophical belief is reached in the phrase, "Evolution of the Soul." And as the soul is reincarnated in a great number of earthly tenements, until at last it gradually becomes purified, it takes millions of years to attain a perfect soul. With this Buddhistic doctrine as its mainspring there have arisen many ghostly oriental ceremonials in the observance of Theosophy, and many weird stories in regard to Mrs. Katherine Tingley, its leader.

Mrs. Tingley was born in Newburyport, Mass., in 1857. Her father was an innkeeper by the name of Westcott. Katherine Westcott was sent to a convent in Montreal, from which she escaped to marry Richard Cooke, a printer. She was divorced from Cooke on the ground of desertion, as also from her second husband, George W. Parent, a detective. Her third husband, Philo B. Tingley, is still living and is a bookkeeper in one of the large eastern cities. Mrs. Tingley first became interested in spiritualism and hypnotism, gradually turning her attention to Theosophy. Upon the death of Madame Blavatsky, she became head of the Theosophical society in America.

Her remarkable personality so impressed Dr. Wood of Providence, R. I., that he built the Raja Yoga school for Theosophists at Point Loma. This is a superb tract of 1,600 acres, adorned with magnificent buildings. The total value of the tract and the buildings is estimated at $2,500,000. The Theosophists are possessed of other property, which in all forms is worth close to $5,000,000.

One of Mrs. Tingley's most ardent admirers is A. G. Spalding, the baseball magnate, who has built a handsome residence at Point Loma, and has also contributed materially to the support of the institution. All property is owned "in common," but is held in the name of Mrs. Tingley." When Mr. Spalding visits Lomaland he occupies the building erected by him.

Recently Mr. Spalding arrived at Loma land with his bride. All the inmates, children included, assembled near the Spalding residence and rendered Greek songs tripped through Homeric dances and other fancy steps, all of which, in the dark night was especially picturesque. The costumes for that bridal ceremony, as described by Dr. Jerome A. Anderson of San Francisco, former vice president of Mrs. Tingley's cabinet, gave the scene a most ghostlike appearance. Participants in the Spalding bridal ceremony were dressed in a costume supposed to be like that of the ancient Grecks.

"It was something," said Dr. Anderson, "like a loose skirt tied with a cord. I wore underclothing underneath, but I saw many who did not. It was, to say the least, a chilly costume when worn out-of-doors."

The women wore costumes of a similar character, but Mrs. Tingley's attire was more elaborate than the others. She had donned her large embroidered robe of purple, whence she is known among the cult as "The Purple." Formerly she was called "Mother," but she forbade that title.

Mrs. Tingley believes that fasting purifies the soul by driving out the lower animal nature. Although many facts are observed at Point Loma, yet not to such an extent as to be detrimental to health, for the ninety odd children in the institution all look remarkably rosy and healthy.

Beneath the supreme self-sufficiency of Mrs. Tingley there is a strong regard for popular opinion, and although in her mystic cult with its weird rituals and esoteric beliefs she is widely at variance with the opinions of the civilized world, yet she was shrewd enough or honest enough to do nothing which could render her liable to criminal prosecution.

Excommunicated Tingleyites state that in her dog, "Spot," Mrs. Tingley found the reincarnated soul of William Q. Judge, former high priest of the universal brotherhood and founder of the American school of Theosophy. One man banished from the institution at Point Loma tells of an incident that happened in Mrs. Tingley's room at a time when she was discouraged and much disheartened. She had thrown a pile of unopened letters to the floor. Spot nosed among the letters and selected one written by Dr. Allen Griffin, bringing it to his mistress. Mrs. Tingley opened it and is said to have found great comfort in the selection. Spot is very carefully tended, and has several suits of clothes to protect him from the changes in the weather; for, if he should die, the intelligence of William Q. Judge might reappear in some animal thousands of miles from Lomaland, and the universal brotherhood would lose one of its most valuable advisors.

In appearance Mrs. Tingley is a small, rather plump woman of genial yet decided manners. She keeps much to herself, conducts a vast correspondence, and personally attends to all the business of the Raja Yoga school. She exacts implicit obedience from everyone at Lomaland. None but Theosophists are allowed upon the grounds, except when attended, and consequently many members of that organization are obliged to perform menial tasks. Among other queer rules, no conversation is permitted at meal times. No one is permitted to approach Mrs. Tingley unless first addressed. One of the "Purple's" favorite diversions is listening to a reader who is daily selected from among the staff.

Senseless as may seem many of the observances at Point Loma, some of the principles which the institution is espoused to advocate are yet beneficient in the extreme. All the children are taught to become self-reliant, and even the youngest are taught to train and dress themselves. Music, both vocal and instrumental, is made a special feature of Lomaland.

The principal buildings are the homestead, the school for the Revival of the Lost Mysteries of Antiquity, the Temple of Music and Drama. To these may be added the Isis theater in San Diego, the largest and best equipped theater on the Pacific coast.

Mrs. Tingley asserts that the keynote of the coming ages is being sounded at Point Loma. Enemies of Theosophy state that she would do away with the marriage relation and have society based upon the individual as a unit rather than on the family. Whatever theories this remarkable woman may have in view of accomplishment, her work in training the Cuban children upder her care has been of the most practical and effective nature.

THE DEVIL IN RED

A STORY OF MARDI GRAS.

By ESTHER SILVIUS.

It was gala day in New Orleans. Canal street was gaily decorated, and superbly mounted policemen patrolled the streets to keep back the crowd when the gaudily decorated procession passed, to be viewed by the thousands who thronged the thoroughfare. Pandemonium reigned supreme.

All that day Dr. Richard Burton, who had arrived from the north the day before, had met grotesque forms. At one street corner there would be a clown with cap, bells and fool's wand, address a crowd of admirers. Suddenly from an alley would dart a small boy dressed as a devil, only to be followed by a jeering lot of his confreres. Further up the street would come a party grotesquely dressed as for a masked ball with music, laughter and a suspicion of being a little too jolly. At every block some queer and often remarkable masquerade met the eye.

Dr. Burton had been to the French market on the levee, sat at the long table and drank black coffee. He had viewed the cathedral, taken a meal at Mme. Begues' restaurant and seen the autographs of Eugene Field, Sol Smith Russell and many Americans and foreign celebrities, whose presence had at various times graced this bohemian roof. He had seen the street chained off in front of the court house to prevent noise, and while in the French quarter he had paid a shilling and gone into the haunted house made famous by Cable, but now converted into a saloon. He felt he had made the regulation tour that a northerner is supposed to make and now, just after he had purchased candy from the old praline woman at the corner, he was stopped by the Devil.

Dr. Burton was a materialist and a practical man, and although he knew this was but an impersonation it gave him an uncanny feeling. He looked at the bright horned figure, with its pointed feet and protruding tail and wished any other of the masqueraders had stopped him.

The Devil seemed to be in good spirits. He ran round and round the doctor, as if to view him the better, leered in a frightful manner, pirouetted back and forth, shook his fist in the northerner's face, retreated a few steps and finally with a Satanic war whoop that called the people in the neighboring houses to their windows, he thrust a paper into the doctor's hands and disappeared down a convenient alley, without sulphuric flames.

In spite of himself the doctor laughed. He had seen enough of these pranks to know that as a rule they were harmless, and he felt curious to know what the envelope contained. Hastening on his way lest he should sustain a second attack at the hands of his Satanic majesty he opened the note. Inside was written this mysterious message: "Notice the lady in white on the balcony of the Checker club this evening."

He was about to throw it away when he reflected that he could stand under that very balcony that evening.

"While, of course, it is a fool's prank," he soliloquized, as he put the note in his pocket, "it won't hurt, though my message was meant for some other man."

At 8 o'clock that evening Dr. Burton was one of the throng that lined the sides of Canal street. Way out into the middle of the wide thoroughfare there was a seething, pushing mass of humanity. A policeman on a gaily caparisoned horse rode up and down, pushing back a crowd which in a moment surged forward again. Over the sidewalks were built the balconies, gaily decorated with flowers and bunting streamers. An air of good nature prevailed. One breathed it in the atmosphere as the carriages filled with creole women, with bare necks and party gowns rolled by.

Dr. Burton from his situation under the balcony of the Checkers club could view the occupants. But though he saw many beautiful women, clad in white, no one in particular attracted his attention. He was thinking how foolish he was to pay the slightest attention to such a message when a blare of trumpets and brilliant lights in the distance warned him that mardi gras was in full swing and the crowning triumph of all, the procession, was approaching. After that for a moment he had eyes for nothing more.

Slowly it approached in all its magnificence. Never in all his imagination had he pictured such a scene. First came Rex in his gilded car drawn by magnificent white horses, holding the keys of the city and surrounded by his courtiers. Then followed in rapid succession float after float of exquisite workmanship, regal in their effect of richness and beauty, and filled with men and women dressed in the height of elegance. Though the doctor had heard that every year the secret societies of New Orleans vied with each other in elaboration of detail and elegancies of costume, he was not prepared for this.

First came the "Odyssey," the whole story being told in order by the beautiful floats—Hector, Achilles, Priam—each told his tale. Then came "Mother Goose," with the various floats descriptive of her songs, all fitted with an elegance he had never seen before. Hans Christian Andersen's fairy tales followed. The electric lights shone full on the royal pageant, the cries of the people as it passed, the electric thrill of admiration that went from one to another, as they viewed the procession, the gaily dressed men and women sipping coffee and anisette and calling to one another, the flowers, real and artificial, that were thrown from the crowd and caught by the men as they passed in the floats, all this seemed to the prosaic doctor like fairyland, and he no longer wondered that these valiant southerners, with their beautiful women, could enjoy a repetition of this yearly.

He was in the midst of these reflections when a beautiful red rose fell from the balcony above him and lighted on his shoulder. Quick as a flash the doctor caught it and looked up to see under the sparkle of the electric lights a vision of white skin, black hair an opera cloak flung carelessly back from white shoulders and a face that he was dimly conscious he had stared at every moment that his attention had not been directed to the procession. Then as the last float passed with a flourish, the balcony above was hastily emptied and the surging crowd in the street quickly dispersed.

Two hours later the doctor was in bed in his room at the St. Charles. He had attended the reception at the Carnival palace to which he was summoned by an invitation of elaborate workmanship by the mighty Rex. He had seen the beautiful Creole Queen, with her Parisian dress that cost thousands of dollars, and had seen the reckless exchange of gifts and favors in the dance. Then he returned to his hotel and dreamed confused dreams, in which the Red Devil was Rex and he was about to dissect his brain to see if the sulphurous fumes of his habitat had affected the brain cells or tissues.

A loud knock at the door aroused him. Springing to his feet he learned that a lady had been taken suddenly ill—the house physician was at the ball, would Dr. Burton attend her?

In less time than it takes to tell the doctor, accustomed to sudden calls, was in his patient's room and confronted by an elderly lady who introduced herself as Mrs. Bradley Reid.

"I am not the patient," she went on as she approached the door that led into the bedroom. "My daughter and myself came with her young brother to the mardi gras." The doctor approached the bed, asked the necessary questions, gave directions for the administration of some medicine, and was in the next room before he realized that his mechanical professional attitude had barely allowed him to remember that the young woman for whom he had just prescribed bore an unmistakable resemblance to the lady on the balcony.

"I feel," he reassured Mrs. Reid, as he prepared to leave, "that your daughter from her symptoms and what she tells me, will be all right tomorrow. She seems nervous and excitable."

"The truth is, doctor," said Mrs. Reid, growing confidential, "we attended the parade and my daughter expected to go to the ball, but she was so annoyed by a boy dressed as a red devil that danced around her and told her that a man on the sidewalk was watching her, that I was obliged to take her home. Since, I have found out, it was her own brother, who is just at the mischievous age that such pranks are cunning, but her fright was genuine."

How the doctor left the room he never knew. He assured the old lady of his sympathy, condemned the young man's conduct, and when shut in the privacy of his own room, looked at the rose, and said aloud as he prepared for bed: "I have much to thank the youngster for. They come from Chicago, but I might have lived there all my life and never known them. Now, thanks to the pranks of a Devil in Red—who knows?"

* * * * * * *

Six months afterward Mrs. Richard Burton was pouring the coffee for her husband in their comfortable quarters on the boulevard.

"You know," she said, with a short laugh, "it is the worst of bad form to be jealous on the first year of one's marriage—but this morning I came across a faded red rose, and as I never gave you one—"

She leaned forward and gently patted his hand and looked into his eyes.

"As you never gave me one you thought it was the other girl," said the doctor, laughing. "Do you remember Bob's prank at the mardi gras, through which I luckily met you? Well, that young scoundrel had read the hotel register to some purpose when he picked out me as a stranger from Chicago and followed me. I was the man who stood under the balcony, and though you do not know it, the rose in your hair—"

"Dropped, that was what you were going to say," cried Mrs. Richard excitedly, "and you have kept it all this time! No wonder I love you," she went on conclusively, "and we have both cause to thank the Devil in Red, even if it was only Bob with his mischief-making propensities and usual tendency to make himself a nuisance. For once at least the Devil in Red endeared himself to two people. Don't you—" but what she was going to say was lost in the folds of the doctor's coat.
